On the night of the 15th, we encamped on the Jackson and Vicksburg Railroad, near Bolton Station. In the morning we left camp about six o'clock, and moved east about 7 miles, when we approached very nearly to the enemy, drawn up in line of battle. In pursuance of orders of Brigadier General Hovey, I formed the Second Brigade in two lines to the left of the road, in the field of one Champion,⁶ with the artillery in advance. Soon thereafter I placed my lines of battle in advance of the artillery, and ordered two companies of the Forty-seventh Indiana, two companies of the Fifty-sixth Ohio, and two companies of the Twenty-fourth Iowa, as skirmishers, who covered the whole front of the line and advanced toward the enemy. Skirmishing soon began, and continued for about one hour, when I advanced the whole line, with the Forty-seventh Indiana on the right, and the Twenty-eighth Iowa on the left. The thick growth of underbrush and vines, ravines and hills, made it very difficult to advance, but it was accomplished with little disorder, until we reached the crest of the hill, where we found the enemy in very heavy force, about 200 yards in front of us, and under cover of a wood beyond a field. Then the battle began with great fury, our troops advancing for the purpose of driving the enemy from the cover of the woods, which was done at double-quick and in a most gallant manner, the men loading and firing as they advanced, and unflinching receiving a most deadly fire from the enemy; yet they pressed forward, as men only can do who are prompted by intelligent motives of patriotic devotion to a common country, until the rebel force was driven from the covering and forced to fall back a distance of 200 yards, with terrible loss, the ground being literally covered with dead and wounded rebels. In this daring and determined charge all the regiments lost most severely. The Twenty-fourth Iowa most gallantly charged upon a rebel battery of five guns, and took it at the point of the bayonet, killing many of the cannoneers and driving the remainder from their guns and some fifty yards to the rear, when a new rebel line, which had not been in action, appeared in treble our force, and opened a most murderous fire upon our lines, which the unflinching and determined braves of the Twenty-fourth Iowa resisted for fifteen minutes, but, because of the overwhelming force brought to bear upon them, reluctantly retired from the battery, but kept the rebel re-enforcements at bay by their incessant fire and stubborn resistance. This battery was subsequently retaken, and is now in our possession. During this terrific charge, Major Edward Wright, of the Twenty-fourth Iowa, was severely wounded, immediately after which he captured a stalwart rebel prisoner and made him carry him off the field. . . . Our ranks being badly depleted, I directed the whole command to retire gradually from the field and take position near the crest of the hill where the rebel lines were first formed, which was done in good order, at which time a re-enforcement of one brigade came to our support, and after a few well directed volleys, with the aid of the batteries, which General Hovey had massed on the extreme right, the enemy was routed and fled in great confusion and disorder from the field. . . . Thus ended this unequal, terrible and most sanguinary conflict. . . . For two long hours my brigade held in check fully three times their number, and I hesitate not in saying that, had they not so gallantly and determinedly resisted, the fortunes of the day might have been greatly damaged, if not our glorious triumph turned into a defeat. During the progress of the battle, my command took a large number of prisoners, which were handed over to the Provost-marshal without any account being taken of them. . . . Major L. H. Goodwin of the Forty-seventh Indiana and Major Edward Wright of the Twenty-fourth Iowa were seriously wounded while gallantly leading their men, but I am more than grateful to know that they are both rapidly recovering and will soon be able to resume their respective positions. To those brave officers and men who fell in that sanguinary conflict and who resolved to do or die in defense of and for the perpetuation of the best Government ever known to civilization, we cannot do more than assure their friends at home that they fell with their faces to the foe, in defense of the constitution of a common country. . . . The whole number of casualties (detailed lists of which I herewith inclose) is as follows: Forty-seventh Indiana, killed 32, wounded 91, missing 17, total 140. Fifty-sixth Ohio, killed 20, wounded 90, missing 28, total 138. Twenty-fourth Iowa, killed 35, wounded 120, missing 34, total 189. Twenty-eighth Iowa, killed 21, wounded 62, missing 14, total 97. First Missouri Battery, wounded 2.

⁶Which gave the name to the battlefield.

It will thus be seen that the entire loss of the brigade was 556, out of the four regiments and one battery of which it was composed, of which number the loss of the Twenty-fourth Iowa constituted one-third. Near the close of his very full and complete report of the part taken by the two brigades of his division in the battle of Champion's Hill, General Hovey says:

I cannot think of this bloody hill without sadness and pride. Sadness for the great loss of my true and gallant men; pride for the heroic bravery they displayed. No prouder division ever met as vastly superior foe and fought with more unflinching firmness and stubborn valor. It was, after the conflict, literally the hill of death; men, horses, cannon, and the debris of an army lay scattered in wild confusion. Hundreds of the gallant Twelfth Division were cold in death or writhing in pain, and, with large numbers of Quinby's gallant boys, lay dead, dying or wounded, intermixed with our fallen foe. Thus ended the battle of Champion's Hill, and our heroes slept upon the field with the dead and dying around them. I never saw fighting like this. The loss of my division on this field alone was nearly one-third of my forces engaged. Of the Twenty-ninth Wisconsin, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Iowa, in what words of praise shall I speak? Not more than six months in the service, their records will compare with the oldest and best tried regiments in the field. All honor is due to their gallant officers and men; and Colonels Gill, Byam and Connell have my thanks for the skill with which they handled their respective commands, and for the fortitude, endurance and bravery displayed by their gallant men. . . . Among the dead of the Second Brigade are the honored names of Captains Silas D. Johnson, William Carbee and First Lieutenant Chauncey Lawrence of the Twenty-fourth Iowa.

The total loss in both brigades of General Hovey's division in the battle of Champion's Hill was 1,202, of the 4,180 engaged.⁷ General Hovey places the loss of the Twenty-fourth Indiana at 40 per cent of its number engaged, and gives that as the maximum loss of any one regiment. Reference to the tabulated statement shows this to be an error. The Twenty-fourth Iowa had 417 enlisted men and officers engaged in the battle, and its loss was 189, over 45 per cent of the number engaged, and this was the heaviest percentage of loss of any regiment of the brigade or division. There were but nine companies of the Twenty-fourth Iowa engaged at Champion's Hill; Company B, being at that time on detached duty at General McClelland's headquarters, was not engaged. The regiment had now been in the service less than eight months, yet it had taken its place by the side of regiments from other states which had participated in numerous battles and had won the designation of Veteran, had fought with equal distinction, had won the highest commendation of its brigade and division commanders and, at the very beginning of its experience under the fire of the enemy, had established a record for bravery and efficiency second to none of the gallant regiments from Iowa which had preceded it to the field.

The Twenty-fourth Iowa marched with its brigade from the battlefield of Champion's Hill to Black River Bridge, but did not arrive there in time to participate in the battle in which the Twenty-first and Twenty-third Iowa regiments won such distinguished honor. Remaining at Black River for a few days, the regiment continued its march to Vicksburg, where it arrived on the 24th of May and at once took its position on the line of investment in the center of General Hovey's division, where for the succeeding forty days it endured the hardships, dangers and privations incident to the siege of the rebel stronghold which surrendered to General Grant on the 4th of July, 1863. On the morning of July 5th, the regiment marched with its brigade and division, as a part of the army under General Sherman, in the expedition against Jackson, Miss., and participated in the operations which ensued, culminating in the evacuation of Jackson by the enemy on July 16, 1863, and the end of the great Vicksburg campaign. The total loss of the two brigades of General Hovey's division, from the commencement of the siege of Vicksburg to the evacuation of Jackson, was 155 killed and wounded, while that of the Twenty-fourth Iowa, during the same period, was 1 killed and 12 wounded. As there were twelve organizations in the division, the loss of the Twenty-fourth Iowa was about the same average as that of the other regiments of the division. During the entire campaign the aggregate losses of the Twenty-fourth Iowa in battle were 208.

Upon its return to Vicksburg the regiment was allowed a brief period of rest in camp. Colonel Byam had resigned on the 30th of June, and Lieutenant Colonel Wilds had succeeded to the command of the regiment. About the middle of August, 1863, the regiment was transferred to a new field of operations. Embarking on transports, it was conveyed to New Orleans, and from there proceeded to Algiers. From the date of its arrival at Algiers, the compiler finds a carefully written record of its subsequent operations, during the year 1864, prepared by Major (later Lieutenant Colonel, Colonel and Brevet Brigadier General⁸) Ed Wright for the Adjutant General of Iowa.⁹ Only brief quotations can be made from this record and the copies of official reports which accompany it, on account of limitation of space, but the compiler will endeavor to include all the most important events which transpired during this period of the service of the regiment. Reference to the record will show that the events which transpired during each month of the year are carefully noted and the details given with great particularity, a large part of which are necessarily omitted in this historical sketch.

During the greater part of the month of January, 1863, the regiment was in camp at Algiers, La., being at that time a part of the Second Brigade of the Third Division, Thirteenth Army Corps. The location of the camp was such that the men suffered much hardship from the wet weather which prevailed. On January 21st, the division was moved to Madisonville, La., on the north side of Lake Pontchartrain, and there the regiment found the most beautiful and attractive camping ground it had occupied since leaving the State of Iowa. There the regiment remained until February 26th, when it returned to its former camp at Algiers, and there, on the 3d of March, with its brigade and division, marched in review before General McClernand and was especially complimented by the General for its fine appearance and perfection in drill.

On March 5th, the regiment was conveyed by rail to Berwick Bay, La. From there all camp equipage that could possibly be dispensed with and all extra baggage was sent back to New Orleans, and the troops prepared for rapid marching as reinforcements to the army under General Banks, then engaged in his unfortunate Red River Expedition. The troops consisted of the Third Division of the Thirteenth Army Corps, which included the brigade to which the Twenty-fourth Iowa belonged. The division marched rapidly to Washington, La., where it overtook the Nineteenth Army Corps, under General Franklin. The march was continued, with occasional halts for rest, when, on the 31st of March, the troops arrived at Natchitoches, La., having marched 290 miles. The march was resumed on the 6th of April and, on the evening of the 7th, the troops arrived at Pleasant Hill, La., and found the cavalry engaged in a skirmish with the enemy at the front. The brigade was ordered to move forward and support the cavalry, but, after marching about one mile, found that the enemy had retired. At daylight the next morning the march was renewed, with the Fourth Division in advance. Five companies of the Twenty-fourth

Iowa were detailed as escort for the train in the rear. About 8 o'clock A. M. the advance encountered the enemy, who, after a short skirmish, retreated. The Third Division halted to await the arrival of the Nineteenth Corps, as the enemy was reported in strong force. At 2 P. M., the next day, the march was resumed. The troops marched very rapidly for five miles, when the enemy was discovered in force, the column was halted, and the First Brigade formed line of battle on the right of the road, with the Second Brigade in line on the left. The engagement which ensued was generally known as the battle of Sabine Cross Roads, but has sometimes been called the battle of Mansfield. Major Wright, who was in command of the Twenty-fourth Iowa, and who wrote the official report of the part taken by that portion of his regiment which was engaged in the battle, after describing the movements of his regiment and brigade prior to the opening of the engagement, says:

The Twenty-fourth, about 130 strong, Companies A, D, I, C and H having been detailed as train guard and left in the rear, under command of Capt Martin, was ordered to form in the rear as a reserve to the Second Brigade. The lines being formed, the advance was ordered. The lines moved forward near a fourth of a mile, when, coming to the edge of the field beyond the timber, a halt was ordered, and the line immediately engaged the enemy. The Twenty-fourth, about three hundred paces in the rear, was ordered to lie down. While in this position, my command received a severe raking artillery fire from the enemy's guns, posted in front of the right of the brigade. Having remained in this position about half an hour, during which time the front line was firing rapidly, I was ordered to move my command to the front, which I did by a left oblique movement, and came in on the left of the brigade, and took position in a ravine, at the edge of the timber. From the position there occupied, I could see with my field glass at least 8,000 of the enemy forming in the distance, but not within range of our muskets. The enemy's skirmishers had advanced to the edge of the hill in our front, and were protected by a battery immediately on their left, which had taken position behind some large buildings, from which place it was impossible for our weak line to dislodge it. The Fourth Division I could not learn anything of, and the only force to oppose these heavy columns of the enemy was the Third Division, about 1,200 strong, and some straggling cavalry. This position was held for near an hour, when, the enemy advancing in heavy force—at least ten to one—and most of the command being out of ammunition, we were overwhelmed by numbers and compelled to retire from the field. This, however, was no easy task, as the enemy's cavalry was already far in our rear, both on the right and left, and we were assailed at all points. I ordered my command to confine their movements to the thick brush, as much as possible, and, by keeping in the woods between the road and an open field on our left, which was occupied by the enemy's cavalry, I succeeded in bringing the most of the command off the field, and forming in the rear of the Nineteenth Army Corps, about three miles from the battlefield, after which I procured ammunition for my men and joined with the One Hundred and Sixty-First New York Volunteers, and remained until after dark. The fight being over, I reported with my command to General Cameron, and marched back to Pleasant Hill, arriving there at sunrise on the morning of the 9th. Casualties during the day were 34, a list of which is hereto appended. The officers and men of my command all behaved well and stood at their posts until ordered to fall back, delivering their fire with a precision not to be surpassed. I cannot close this report without making some comments about the manner in which this battle was managed. It was understood when the army arrived at St. Patrick's Bayou that we had found the enemy in force, and why we should have been sent forward in detachments, only to be demolished by superior numbers, is a mystery to me. First the cavalry moved up and were repulsed; next the Fourth Division was moved forward, and shared the same fate. Then the Third Division moved forward on double quick for five miles, along a road blocked by trains, only to come in contact with an overwhelming force, before which it was compelled to retire. Who is responsible? I leave the question for the historian to answer, believing it will be answered correctly.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

ED WRIGHT,

Major Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

N. B. BAKER, Adjutant General State of Iowa.

The correct answer to Major Wright's question is readily given. His was only one of a number of brave Iowa regiments which lost heavily in that ill-fated expedition, through the utter incapacity of the Commanding General, Nathaniel P. Banks. The verdict of all military historians is unanimous with reference to the Red River Expedition and its commander. Both were stupendous failures. Major Wright displayed great skill and ability in being able to extricate his command from its perilous situation, with a loss of little less than one-third of the number engaged. While the loss was heavy, it is marvelous that, under the circumstances, it was not much greater. Had the other five companies of the regiment been engaged, the loss would have been proportionately greater. It was therefore fortunate that they were on detached duty.

Upon the return of the regiment to Pleasant Hill, Major Wright was placed in command of the brigade and Captain Martin assumed command of the regiment. The Third and Fourth Divisions of the Thirteenth Corps, under command of General Cameron, (General Ransom having been severely wounded,) were ordered to take charge of the train and proceed to Grand Ecore, on Red River. Here the command arrived, on the evening of the 11th, and began the construction of fortifications; Lieutenant Colonel Wilson, of the Twenty-eighth Iowa, succeeding Major Wright as brigade commander. The two divisions left Grand Ecore on the morning of the 22d and reached Cane River at 2 A. M. on the 23d, where the enemy was found strongly posted on the opposite side of the river, for the purpose of contesting the crossing of the Union troops. General Cameron did not attempt to force his way across the river under the fire of the enemy, but, moving his troops up the river, effected a crossing by wading, and thus outflanked the enemy and drove him from his position. A bridge was then put down, over which the army of General Banks had passed by 10 A. M. the next day, when the line of march was again taken up and the army arrived at Alexandria on the 25th. The retreat had been conducted by forced marches and the troops, marching day and night, were completely exhausted upon reaching Alexandria. Company A, of the Twenty-fourth Iowa, had been detailed to guard the steamer "Hetty Gilmore" from Grand Ecore down the river. During the trip a detachment of the enemy attempted to capture the boat but was driven off. Two men of the company, Sergeant Charles Wager and Private Rudolph McKinley, were severely wounded. The company returned to the regiment at Alexandria. Lieutenant Colonel Wilds, who had been absent since December 6th on recruiting service in Iowa, rejoined the regiment at Alexandria and resumed command. Between the 25th of April and the 13th of May the regiment had several sharp skirmishes with the enemy, in which a number of its men were wounded. General Banks commenced his retreat from Alexandria on May 13th, and on the 22d his army reached Morganza Bend. The Twenty-fourth Iowa had a skirmish with the enemy while engaged in a reconnoitering expedition from Morganza, in which Captain B. G. Paul, of Company K, was killed, and four enlisted men were wounded. The losses of the regiment while connected with the troops commanded by General Banks had reached the aggregate number of 48, and the results accomplished, during that period of its service, were not only not commensurate with the loss, but the officers and men of the regiment were fully justified in the opinion that the sacrifice had been in vain, and they were rejoiced to know that a change for the better was in prospect.

The regiment left Morganza on June 13th, proceeded to Carrollton, La., and went into camp near Greenville Station, on the New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad. Leaving there on the 21st, it was subsequently stationed at Kennerly and Thibodeaux, La., until July 6th, upon which date it proceeded by rail to Algiers, where it received—in exchange for the old Enfield rifles with which it had been supplied since taking the field—new Springfield rifles and accouterments. On the morning of July 22d the regiment embarked on the transport "Star of the South" and, soon after, put to sea, with orders to report to the commanding officer at Fortress Monroe, where, after enduring the usual discomforts of a sea voyage, it arrived on the 29th, and at once proceeded to Washington, D. C., arriving there at midnight and, the next morning, proceeding by rail to Monocacy, Md., reached that place on August 1st, where it joined a detachment of the Nineteenth Army Corps under command of General Emory. Colonel Wilds was placed in command of the brigade to which his regiment was attached.

The Twenty-fourth Iowa was now about to enter upon an entirely new field of warfare, in which but few of the regiments from its own State had been called to serve. On the 4th of August it was conveyed by rail to Harper's Ferry, where it arrived at midnight and moved out on the Winchester Pike and went into bivouac. On July 6th the regiment commenced a series of movements in connection with the army; first marching to Halltown, to intercept the army of 30,000 rebels, under the command of General Early, which was moving towards Maryland and Pennsylvania; but the rebel general was not yet ready for a general engagement, and, handling his force with consummate skill, managed to avoid a conflict. The Union force arrived at Cedar Creek, near Strasburg, Va., on August 12th, where it encamped and remained until the 15th, when it fell back to Charleston, where General Grover had just arrived with reinforcements from Washington, and a re-organization of the army took place. The Twenty-fourth Iowa was assigned to the Fourth Brigade, Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, with Colonel Shunk, of the Eighth Indiana Veteran Infantry, commanding the brigade, General Grover commanding the division, and General Emory commanding the detachment of the Nineteenth Corps. The Army of the Shenandoah consisted of two divisions of the Nineteenth Corps, the Sixth Corps commanded by Major General Wright, the Army of Western Virginia commanded by General Crook and about 10,000 cavalry commanded by General Torbet, making in all an army of about 40,000, under command of Major General Sheridan.

On the 3d of September, General Sheridan began the series of movements which led up to the battle of Winchester, September 19, 1864. The part taken by the Twenty-fourth Iowa in that battle is described in the official report of Lieutenant Colonel Wright, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FOURTH IOWA INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS,
CAMP RUSSELL, VA., NOV. 19, 1864.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Twenty-fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers in the battle of Opequon, or Winchester, Va., Sept. 19, 1864.

The regiment was commanded by Lieutenant Colonel J. Q. Wilds, but circumstances beyond his control prevented him from making an official report, prior to the battle of Cedar Creek, at which place he was severely wounded, and has since died; for this reason I take the responsibility of making it myself. On the 18th of September, orders were issued from army headquarters, requiring all transportation to be sent to the rear, also all extra baggage, retaining only such articles as could not be dispensed with; these to be carried by the men, and officers' horses. Thus, stripped of everything that would encumber its movements, the Army of the Shenandoah retired to rest in camp near Berryville, Va., on the evening of the 18th, with orders to be in line of battle ready to move at 2 o'clock next morning. The Twenty-fourth Iowa belonged to the Fourth Brigade, Second Division, Detachment Nineteenth Army Corps. The brigade, consisting of the Eighth and Eighteenth Indiana Veteran Volunteers and the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Iowa, was commanded by Colonel D. Shunk of the Eighth Indiana, the division by Brigadier General C. Grover, the corps by Brevet Major General Emory. At 3 o'clock the advance sounded, and the Nineteenth Corps moved out on the Winchester Pike, halting about three miles west of Berryville, for the Sixth Corps, commanded by Major General Wright, to pass, as it was to have the advance. The Army of Western Virginia, under command of General Crook, moved by another road to the right. Shortly after sunrise, the Sixth Corps having passed, the Nineteenth Corps was put in motion. The Second Division, having the advance, arrived at Opequon Creek about 9 o'clock A. M., when heavy skirmishing and some cannonading was heard in the front, near Winchester. Here we received orders to push forward rapidly, as the cavalry and Sixth Corps were already engaged. When we had reached a point about three miles from Winchester, we turned to the right and moved in the direction of the Winchester and Martinsburg Pike about one mile, and formed line of battle on the right of the Sixth Corps. The Second Division was formed in two lines. The First and Third Brigades formed the first line, and the Second and Fourth Brigades the second. The Twenty-fourth Iowa was on the left center, the Twenty-eighth Iowa on the left, Eighth Indiana on the right, Eighteenth Indiana on the right center, the Fourth Brigade being on the extreme right. Soon after, the First Division, Nineteenth Corps, commanded by General Dwight, came up and formed in the rear as a reserve. In this position we remained until about 12 M., when the advance sounded and the whole line moved forward steadily. The front of the whole division was covered by a strip of woodland, near a third of a mile wide. Beyond this woodland was an open field about one-fourth of a mile wide, beyond which was woodland again. When the second line emerged into the open field, the first line was just entering the wood on the opposite side, having driven the enemy's skirmishers across the open field, and were driving the enemy. The enemy, discovering that our right flank was unprotected, threw a heavy column of infantry, with one battery of artillery, around on our right, nearly at right angles with our lines, and kept them concealed in a deep hollow. In consequence of a flank fire from this column, the first line gave back and passed through the second, when about half way across the field. This created some confusion, but the line was soon in good shape again, and moving forward steadily.

When within one hundred yards of the woods, the column that had been thrown around on our right opened out with musketry and canister shot, showering the iron hail along and almost parallel with our ranks, and mowing down our men by the score. As soon as the flank movement was discovered, the whole line was ordered to fall back to the woods, which was done in as good order as could be expected under the circumstances. The line was reformed and advanced about one-fourth of the way across the field and halted, holding the enemy at bay until some troops could be thrown around to our right, as the enemy's lines extended nearly half a mile to the right of ours. Up to this time the Twenty-fourth had had two officers mortally wounded, and two more severely; six enlisted men killed, and about thirty wounded. This line was held under a most destructive artillery fire from both the front and right flank for about two hours, when General Crook came up with the Army of Western Virginia and formed on the right, relieving the most of the Fourth Brigade. Captains Rigby, Smith and Martin, with Lieutenant Lucas, had been posted with their commands in a point of timber nearest the enemy, with orders to hold it at all hazards, and were not relieved. I had supplied them with ammunition, and when the fresh troops in making the final charge came up even with them, they moved forward with the line, which drove the enemy from every position taken until it became a perfect rout. In this last charge the Twenty-fourth lost a number of brave soldiers wounded, and one killed. After the Fourth Brigade was relieved (except as above mentioned) boxes were filled with ammunition, and it was moved to the extreme right in order to prevent any more flank movements of the enemy, but General Averill, coming in with his cavalry, rendered the movement entirely unnecessary. After the enemy was entirely routed and driven pell-mell from the field, the regiment was got together, and marched about two miles, and went into camp near Winchester, on the Front Royal Pike. Casualties during the day: Officers mortally wounded 2, severely, 4. Enlisted men killed, 9; wounded, 56; captured, 3. Total 74; a list of which is hereto appended. I cannot close this report without referring to Captain J. R. Gould, of Company D, and Lieutenant S. S. Dillman, of Company E, both having been mortally wounded while leading their men on in the hottest of the battle. Both were brave almost to rashness. In them the Twenty-fourth Iowa lost two valuable officers and society two valuable men.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully,

Your Obedient Servant,

ED WRIGHT,

Lieutenant Colonel Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

COL. N. B. BAKER, Adjutant General of Iowa.¹⁰

It will be seen from the foregoing report that the Twenty-fourth Iowa had, in its first battle in the east, gloriously maintained its previous proud record, and had upheld the honor of its State while fighting beside the trained veterans of the Army of the Potomac.

On the night of the 19th of September the regiment went into camp near Winchester. The next morning it marched towards Cedar Creek, and in the evening found the enemy strongly intrenched at Fisher's Hill. The Twenty-fourth Iowa actively participated in the movements which followed and which culminated in the battle of Fisher's Hill, in which, and in the pursuit which followed, the regiment participated, but fortunately—owing to the positions to which its brigade was assigned—it had but one officer and four men wounded. Lieutenant Colonel Wright, in his official report,¹¹ describes minutely the part taken by his regiment in the battle of Fisher's Hill, and highly commends the officers and men for their prompt obedience to orders and the gallant manner in which they conducted themselves during the battle and the subsequent pursuit of the enemy. The rebel General Early and his army had again been defeated and compelled to retreat up the Shenandoah valley.

In all the operations of its brigade and division, from the 23d of September until the 19th of October, upon which latter date the Twenty-fourth Iowa fought its last battle, the regiment performed its full share of duty and always acquitted itself with honor. Although it remained in the service for nearly six months after the battle of Cedar Creek, the remainder of its history, while characterized by the same faithful devotion to duty, was not marked by further severe conflict with the enemy. The compiler deems it most fitting, therefore, that the conduct of the regiment in the memorable battle of Cedar Creek, as portrayed in the official report of its gallant commander, should occupy the greater portion of the space left at his disposal for this historical sketch. In this, one of the most remarkable battles of the great War of the Rebellion, the Twenty-fourth Iowa suffered heavy loss, and ended its battle history by as splendid and heroic fighting as was ever exhibited upon any battlefield. The official report is here given in full:

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FOURTH IOWA INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS,
CAMP RUSSELL, VA., Nov. 19, 1864.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by the Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers in the battle of Cedar Creek, Va., on the 19th of October, 1864. The regiment belonged to the Fourth Brigade, Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps; Brevet Major General Emory commanding corps, Brigadier General Grover commanding division, and Colonel Shunk, Eighth Indiana Veteran Volunteers, commanding brigade. The brigade occupied the left of the second line, which was about two hundred paces in rear of the line of works occupied by the first line. The left of the brigade rested about two hundred yards to the right of the pike leading from Winchester to Stanton. The works in our front were occupied by the Third Brigade, Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, with Battery D, First Rhode Island Artillery, near the pike on the left. The regiment occupied the right center of the brigade, with the Twenty-eighth Iowa on the left. The Eighth Corps, under command of Major General Crook, was posted on the left of the pike, and about three hundred paces to the front. The Sixth Corps was on the right of the Nineteenth, with its right thrown back toward Middletown, about one mile. Our teams parked about one mile in the rear. The enemy was in camp at Fisher's Hill, some four miles to the front. In this position we rested on the evening of the 18th, not even suspecting our danger, or the Yankee trick that Early was going to play on us the next morning.

Soon after retiring to bed, Colonel Wilds, then in command of the regiment, received orders to have the men under arms at precisely 5 o'clock next morning, as the first line was to make a reconnaissance to the front, and the Fourth Brigade was to move up to the works as soon as vacated. In obedience to this order, at 5 o'clock the regiment was in line of battle, and ready to move to the works. Having reason to believe that the reconnaissance would not last more than one or two hours, as the order was not to bring on an engagement, everything except arms and accouterments were left in tents. At ten minutes past 5 o'clock, firing commenced on the picket line of the Eighth Corps. Supposing it to be only a reconnaissance by the enemy, it created but little alarm. In a few minutes heavy firing commenced on the left and front of the Eighth Corps. It was not yet daylight, and a dense fog, which had settled to the ground, rendered it almost impossible to distinguish objects at any distance. Soon after the firing commenced on the left, the brigade was ordered to move by the left flank, until the left of the Twenty-fourth Iowa rested on the pike. Colonel Wilds ordered me to ride to the left of the regiment, and to lead it to the place indicated, but, before reaching the pike, I was ordered to halt and take position, as we were already receiving the enemy's fire. The regiment was halted, and the right thrown forward so as to form a line across the crest of the hill, at an angle of forty-five degrees with the pike, the right of the brigade, Eighteenth Indiana Veteran Volunteers, supporting the battery on the left of the first line. The fog was so dense that it was impossible to tell what was in front of us, and, as the Eighth Corps was falling back at the time, our fire was reserved until the enemy had pressed his columns close up to and charged the battery on the right, one piece of which was captured. We held the position, however, until Colonel Shunk, discovering that the enemy had thrown a column across the pike on our left, ordered the brigade to fall back about five hundred yards, and take position parallel to and facing the pike. This was done in good order, and the position taken and held, until it became necessary, in the opinion of General Grover, to fall back, in order to prevent being cut off entirely. (Up to this time the regiment had lost six men killed and about forty wounded.) The order was given to fall back as rapidly as possible in the direction of the camp of the Sixth Corps. The enemy came in heavy force on our left and captured four officers and about forty men. The brigade fell back about one mile and formed between the First Brigade, General Birge, and the Sixth Corps, which was on the left.

Previous to this time, Colonel Wilds had been wounded and carried from the field. I had also received a bruise on my hip from a piece of shell, and a wound from a musket ball in the left arm near the elbow, which sickened me so that I could not ride for near an hour, and the regiment was commanded by Captain L. Clark, during my absence. Soon after I returned to the regiment, which was then in the position above mentioned, the enemy made a flank movement to the left of the Sixth Corps, rendering it necessary for it to fall back, and we were ordered to retire by the right of regiments to the rear. We moved in this manner nearly three miles, halted, took position, procured ammunition and prepared to renew the battle. After we had rested about half an hour, Major General Sheridan came on the field, having been absent since the morning of the 18th. He ordered the Eighth Corps to take position on the left of the pike between Middletown and Newtown, the Sixth Corps the center, and the Nineteenth Corps the right. Sent two divisions of cavalry to the right, and one to the left. The Fourth Brigade was formed on the extreme left of the Nineteenth Corps, connecting with the right of the Sixth Corps. In this position the troops were ordered to rest, and throw up some temporary works.

About 12 o'clock I was ordered to move the Twenty-fourth Iowa to the extreme right of the Nineteenth Corps, and protect the flank. I immediately moved to the place indicated, took position and threw out a skirmish line. In this position I remained until 3 o'clock P. M., when I received orders to call in my skirmishers and take my place in the line, as it was going to advance. My skirmishers had just reported when the advance was sounded. In order to get my position in the line, I had to double quick about one mile, and, during the greater part of this distance, we had to pass through the fire of the enemy's guns, which overshot our advancing columns, the shells exploding in the rear. About 3½ o'clock, I got my place in the line, which steadily advanced, driving the enemy from every position taken until we reached the camp we left in the morning. Here we halted and made some coffee, (those of us who were fortunate enough to have any,) the first we had tasted since the evening of the 18th. We found one wounded officer there, who had hidden among the rocks during the day, and quite a number of our wounded men. Everything was taken from our camp, leaving the men and most of the officers without haversacks, blankets or shelter tents. At 8 o'clock P. M., the regiment moved forward, with the brigade, to a point near Strasburg, to protect the parties that were sent out to collect the property abandoned by the enemy in his hasty retreat. There we bivouacked for the night, without fires, the men suffering severely for want of blankets and proper clothing to protect them from the excessive cold. On the following morning (20th) the remainder of the Second Division came up, and we went into camp about one mile from Strasburg.

It would appear invidious to mention individual cases of gallantry during the day, when all, both men and officers, did their whole duty. I cannot close, however, without referring to the bravery of our lamented Colonel Wilds, who was wounded soon after daylight and died November 18th. In him we lost a noble, brave and efficient officer. Captain Knott and Lieutenant Kurtz were wounded and captured, but both were retaken in the evening. Captain Smith and Lieutenant Davis were captured in the morning about daylight. The loss of the regiment was: Killed; enlisted men 7. Wounded; officers 6, enlisted men 39. Captured; officers 2, enlisted men 39. Total casualties 93; a list of which is hereto annexed.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

ED WRIGHT,

Lieutenant Colonel Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

N. B. BAKER, Adjutant General State of Iowa.¹²

During the remainder of the month of October the regiment participated in the various movements of its brigade and division in the Shenandoah Valley, but did not again come into contact with any considerable force of the enemy. In the early part of November the regiment was engaged in the duty of escorting supply trains for the army. On the 8th of November, 1864, the officers and men of the regiment recorded their choice for President of the United States, with the following result: Whole number of votes cast, 303, of which Abraham Lincoln received 285 and George B. McClellan 18. On November 10th the regiment arrived at Camp Russell, where the army of the Shenandoah was encamped, and during the remainder of the month was engaged in the erection of fortifications and building cabins for winter quarters. In December the winter quarters were completed, and the regiment was engaged in the performance of picket and escort duty until the close of the month. On December 30th the regiment was assigned to the post at Winchester, Va. On the 6th of January, 1865, the Twenty-fourth Iowa left Winchester and proceeded by rail to Baltimore, thence by steamship to Savannah, Ga., where it went into camp and remained for two months. It then moved to ¹²Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 1157, 8, 9.

Morehead City, N. C., and, from that point, to Goldsboro and Raleigh, escorting transportation trains. After the surrender of the rebel General Johnston's army, it returned to Savannah, moved thence to Augusta, Ga., with the Twenty-second and Twenty-eighth Iowa, crossed the river at Augusta and went into camp near the town of Hamburg, S. C., where it remained until the 6th of June, when, with the other Iowa regiments, it was ordered to return to Savannah. Its last long march was completed on June 20th. The regiment then went into camp at Savannah, where it remained until the 17th day of July, 1865, on which date it was mustered out of the service of the United States. A few days later it was provided with transportation to Davenport, Iowa, and, upon its arrival there, was disbanded, and the survivors returned to their homes, there to resume and discharge the duties of citizens, with the same fidelity they had shown as soldiers, while engaged in the defense of their country against armed treason and rebellion. No Iowa regiment has a more distinguished record than the Twenty-fourth, and there were only a few others whose operations covered such a wide extent of territory. Everywhere, in camp or garrison, upon the march, in battle, and under all the vicissitudes of its long and arduous service, it maintained in the highest degree the honor of the flag and its State. The archives of the State of Iowa and of the War Department at Washington contain no more glorious record of valor and patriotic service than that of the Twenty-fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

Twenty-fifth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Infantry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The Twenty-fifth Regiment was organized under the proclamation of President Lincoln, bearing date July 2, 1862. The ten companies of which it was composed were ordered into quarters by Governor Kirkwood, on dates ranging from August 2 to September 1, 1862. The place of rendezvous designated in the order of the Governor was Camp McKean, near Mount Pleasant, Iowa, and there, on the 27th of September, 1862, the companies and the field and staff officers of the regiment were mustered into the service of the United States, by Captain George S. Pierce of the United States Army. At the completion of the muster the regiment had an aggregate strength of 972 men, including the field, staff and company officers. There were 23 early additional enlistments, which brought the total number of the regiment to 995, at or about the time it left the State for the field of active military operations.¹ The commander of the regiment, Colonel George A. Stone, had won honor and distinction in his previous service as First Lieutenant of Company F, First Iowa Infantry and, later, as Major of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry. Under the instruction of this very capable and energetic officer, the regiment improved to the utmost the time it remained in rendezvous and, by the time it left the State, had acquired a fair knowledge of the drill and discipline so essential to effective service in the field.

Early in November the regiment proceeded to St. Louis, and thence down the Mississippi River to Helena, Ark., where it went into camp. During its stay at Helena, detachments from the regiment accompanied reconnoitering expeditions to White River and elsewhere, but the record does not show that these expeditions encountered any considerable force of the enemy. The regiment was assigned to the Second Brigade of the First Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, the brigade commanded by General Hovey, and the division by General Steele. On the 22d of December, 1862, the regiment embarked on transports and moved down the Mississippi with the forces under command of General Sherman, and participated in that notable but unsuccessful movement against Vicksburg, by way of Chickasaw Bayou, in which it lost one man killed, seven wounded and two captured or missing.² Returning from this expedition, the regiment, with its brigade and division, comprising part of the Fifteenth Army Corps, under command of Major General Sherman, with the Thirteenth Army Corps, commanded by Major General McClernand, moved down the Mississippi River to Arkansas Post. On January 11, 1863, the Twenty-fifth Iowa participated in the battle which resulted in the capture of that rebel stronghold. The conduct of his regiment in the battle is described in the official report of Colonel Stone as follows:

¹Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1863, Vol. 1, page VIII, and the Original Roster of the Regiment, Vol. 1, pages 884 to 917 inclusive.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FIFTH IOWA INFANTRY,
CAMP AT ARKANSAS POST, ARK., Jan. 12, 1863.

GENERAL: I herewith hand you the report of the part taken by my regiment in the action yesterday. I was ordered by our brigade commander, General Hovey, to form the regiment in the rear of the Seventy-sixth Ohio, Colonel Woods, the leading regiment, and sustain him in a bayonet charge on the enemy's fortifications. My command, to that effect, was promptly obeyed, and the two regiments, with yells creditable to Indians, started over an open space of ground for some 500 yards, exposed to the grape and canister of a rebel battery, of 6 pounder Parrott guns, and the rifles of five Texas Infantry regiments. The clear space was passed over with some loss and we then had some 200 yards more to make, 100 of which was through abatis and ditches. The Seventy-sixth Ohio had cleared everything but the last 100 yards of open ground that separated it from the breastworks, we following 20 yards in their rear; when the fire was so terrific, and the men so much exhausted, that the first line was compelled to halt, and we then for the first capped our rifles and responded to the enemy's fire, constantly advancing till the last line of defense for us was reached; and, after three hours fighting, the rebel flag was struck and the white one displayed, indicating that the enemy had surrendered. Some 5,000 prisoners, with several batteries, siege guns, and ordnance stores, small arms, etc., are a part of the fruits of this truly great victory. My regiment was complimented by the Texas Colonel in front of us, who remarked he was almost sure they must be Iowa troops. The casualties are as follows:³ . . . Adjutant S. Kirkwood Clark was wounded severely by a gunshot wound through the left leg, just below the knee. I do but justice when I notice the Adjutant in this report, for his cool and gallant conduct as well in this fight as the one in the vicinity of Vicksburg. He has received and has well earned the praise of the entire regiment. I also must notice Privates Hiram Payne of Company B, and Ben F. Weaver of Company C, who, on account of the Color Sergeant being sick, volunteered for the duty of carrying the colors, and right nobly did they perform it. We were the second regiment in the rebel fortifications.

Very respectfully, General,

GEO. A. STONE, Colonel Commanding.

ADJUTANT GENERAL N. B. BAKER, Davenport, Iowa.⁴

Adjutant Clark died from the effect of his wound, and was succeeded by First Lieutenant Samuel W. Snow, of Company E. The regiment returned to the vicinity of Vicksburg, and went into camp near Young's Point for the remainder of the winter. During its first campaign, the Twenty-fifth Iowa had suffered much from sickness, having much the same experience as all new regiments in that respect; but the records show that the fatalities from disease were not as great as in most of the other Iowa regiments which were encamped in the same unhealthy locality. Colonel Stone was noted for the care with which he looked after the health of his men, and provided everything available for their comfort, while exercising strict discipline and requiring them to observe such sanitary regulations as were possible under the conditions in which they were placed during that gloomy winter of 1863. In the meantime, General Grant was making active preparations for the beginning of another aggressive campaign, to commence as soon as the necessary number of troops could be concentrated under his command.

On the 2d of April the Twenty-fifth Iowa, with its brigade and division, started upon the expedition—conducted by General Steele—to Greenville, Miss., and further into the interior of the State. While the object of the expedition was mainly to distract the attention of the enemy from the principal movement of the campaign, it accomplished more than that, by the capture of considerable quantities of supplies which were intended for the use of the rebel army. The division remained in camp near Greenville, from which place detachments were sent into the surrounding country, gathering supplies, until April 24th, when, the purpose of the expedition having been accomplished, it returned to Milliken's Bend. From that place, Colonel Stone, commanding the Twenty-fifth Iowa and the Thirtieth Missouri regiments, marched to Richmond, La., where he remained in camp for a few days, and then marched to Hard Times Landing, where his troops crossed the river on transports to Grand Gulf, arriving there too late, however, to overtake the main portion of the army, which had moved on towards Jackson. Colonel Stone was ordered to proceed with his regiment as escort to a supply train, loaded with rations and ammunition for the army. Upon arriving with the train at Clinton, the regiment rejoined its brigade and division, then marching from Jackson towards Vicksburg. The march was continued. On the 18th of May the regiment joined with the other troops in the investment of Vicksburg, the siege of that rebel stronghold having already begun. In the operations which ensued, the regiment performed its full share of duty. It participated in the arduous and dangerous work of advancing the lines, digging and occupying the trenches, driving the enemy from one advanced position to another, until the troops of the Union army were intrenched in a line close to the frowning forts of the enemy and the main line of heavy works which connected them. The regiment was engaged in the assault upon the enemy's works on the 22d of May, as will be seen from the following extracts from the official reports of its brigade and regimental commanders. In the report of Colonel Charles R. Woods, commanding Second Brigade, First Division, the following reference is made to the Twenty-fifth Iowa:

Owing to the difficulty of moving my brigade, so as to prevent the enemy from seeing our movements, several hours were consumed in reaching our position, and, having reached the rear of the position where the charge was to be made, it was necessary to pass over several pieces of open ground within close range of the enemy's rifle-pits, part of the road being swept by artillery. Fifty or sixty men and officers were killed and wounded in gaining our position. The Twenty-fifth Iowa, Colonel Stone commanding, being in the advance, suffered severely, but as soon as it gained the ravine one wing was thrown forward as skirmishers, and succeeded in a great measure in keeping down the fire of the enemy. . . . The Twenty-fifth Iowa, while deployed as skirmishers, did good execution and lost severely. . . . The officers and men, during all the skirmishes in which they have been engaged, have done their duty well and faithfully, and deserve the highest praise.⁵

Colonel Stone, in his official report, says, in part:

A general attack was ordered by our entire line. Our division, occupying the extreme right of our army, was ordered to gain the heights to our left, near the center of our line, and to assist in carrying the fort opposite. In making this movement, I had the advance with my regiment, and kept it until the heights above mentioned were gained. We failed to carry the fort, and at night the entire division was withdrawn to the position each regiment had occupied in the morning. Officers and men of my regiment behaved well, and I shall not particularize by mentioning any, save Private Isaac Mickey of Company F, who, when I called for some one to volunteer to carry an order for me past a line exposed to the enemy's entire line of sharpshooters, responded at once to the call, carried my message, and returned promptly when the order was executed.⁶

⁵War of the Rebellion Official Records, Series 1, Vol. 24, Part 2, pages 251, 2.

⁶Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1864, pages 474, 5.

Captain James D. Spearman, of Company H, was among the severely wounded and was subsequently discharged on account of the disability thus incurred. The number of casualties in the regiment, in the assault on the 22d of May, were as follows: Killed, enlisted men, 5; wounded, 1 officer and 26 enlisted men; captured or missing, 5 enlisted men. Total 37.⁷ The total casualties sustained by the regiment during the entire siege of Vicksburg numbered 65 in killed, wounded and missing. In addition to this number, many were prostrated by sickness, the result of the great hardships, toil and exposure to which they were subjected in that protracted siege.

On the day following the surrender of Vicksburg, the regiment, with its brigade and division, joined the army under command of General Sherman, which promptly marched in pursuit of the rebel army under command of General J. E. Johnston, and, in the short but vigorous campaign which ensued, performed its full share of duty. During the brief siege of Jackson it lost 2 men killed, and 2 wounded.⁸ Returning from Jackson, the regiment went into camp on Black River, near the scene of the battle of that name, where it enjoyed a season of well-earned rest. It had now been in the service but little more than ten months, had lost 134 men killed and wounded in battle, and a much greater number by disease and discharge for disability. If its record had ended with the campaign just closed, it would have taken its place in history as well deserving the gratitude of the people of the State and Nation for the gallant service it had rendered. But it had yet a long and arduous period of service to perform, as will appear in the history of its subsequent operations, ending only with the close of the war.

In the latter part of September, 1863, the Twenty-fifth Iowa, with its brigade and division, moved from its encampment to Vicksburg, and there embarked for Memphis. General Osterhaus had succeeded General Steele as commander of the division. Upon arriving at Memphis, the troops disembarked and at once took up the line of march to Corinth, thence to Iuka and Cherokee Station. At the latter place the enemy was encountered. The following extract from the official report of Colonel Stone will show with what vigor the enemy's skirmishers were attacked, and how persistently the march was continued to Chattanooga, to reinforce the troops which were so soon to become engaged in the tremendous conflicts around that place:

On Sunday evening, October 25th, at Cherokee, our division received marching orders for 4 A. M. next day, and accordingly the division moved at the hour indicated, in the direction of Tusculumbia, in light marching order and in fine fighting condition. The First Brigade, Brigadier General C. R. Woods commanding, had the advance, and ours, the Second Brigade, Colonel James A. Williamson commanding, the rear. General Osterhaus' orders were very imperative and strict concerning the tactical arrangement of battalions, as the enemy, but some three miles in front of us, was composed entirely of cavalry, and was fully our equal in numerical strength. About two miles from camp we met the enemy's skirmishers, and here formed our line of battle, the First Brigade on the right, and the Second on the left, with one of the other divisions of our Corps as reserve. My position was on the extreme left, and, in accordance with orders, I formed a square to repel cavalry, first, however, having covered my front properly with skirmishers. Our skirmishers pushed the enemy so vigorously, and our lines followed so promptly, that after a short resistance the enemy fell back to another position some four miles to the rear, and made another stand. The same disposition was again made by our division, the same sharp, short fighting with the same result, the hasty retreat of the enemy. We continued this skirmishing during the entire day, and renewed it on the 27th, literally fighting them from Cherokee to Tuscumbia. We entered the town at 3 P. M., on the 27th. Sergeant Nehemiah M. Redding, of Company D, was killed while skirmishing on the 26th. I have no other casualties to mention. Officers and men behaved handsomely.⁹

The troops continued to press forward by forced marches, and at midnight, on November 23d, had reached a point near the foot of Lookout Mountain. The division under General Osterhaus was temporarily attached to the forces under the command of General Hooker. The Twenty-fifth Iowa was assigned to a position in support of a battery of New York artillery. Colonel Stone's official reports of the part taken by his regiment in the battles which followed in rapid succession, are here given in full:

BRIDGEPORT, ALA., Dec. 19, 1863.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report as follows, of the battle of Lookout Mountain, on the 24th of November, 1863. Our division camped on the 23d of November opposite Lookout Mountain, and near General Hooker's headquarters. At 9 P. M. I received orders to be in fighting trim at daylight next morning, and accordingly, at 5 A. M. of the 24th, I was in line of battle, and received orders to support the First Iowa battery during the day. It was intended that our division should act as reserves, while some of Hooker's division should storm the mountain, but this was partially changed, probably on account of one column being ordered further to the right than was first intended, and our division soon took an active part. At 9:30 A. M. I had orders to go to the front, just under a point of rocks on Lookout Mountain, to support the guns of Battery I, First New York Artillery, then in position, and two of which guns were protected by being hastily casemated. This position I retained during the day, and, on account of the admirable place for defense, and the inability of the enemy to sufficiently depress his guns, I found at dark I had not lost a man. Nothing could exceed the grandeur of this battle, from the point at which we viewed it. Every gun from Raccoon Mountain batteries to those of Moccasin Point was in plain view, and our lines of infantry so close that acquaintances were easily recognized. At 12 M. the grand attack began, and soon the battle smoke hung over and enveloped the mountain like a funeral pall, and the whole battle, like a panorama, passed around and before us. At dark, in accordance with orders from General Osterhaus, I reported, with my regiment, for special duty, to Major General Butterfield, General Hooker's Chief of Staff, and was ordered by him to a position on the extreme right of the army, to prevent an anticipated attempt of the enemy to turn our flank at that point. I occupied the point indicated, and made a personal reconnaissance of the ground in front of me. The enemy threatened some during the night, but made no attack, and, at daylight next day, in obedience to orders. I reported back, with my command, to the division.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE A. STONE,

Colonel Commanding Twenty-fifth Iowa.

ADJUTANT GENERAL N. B. BAKER, Davenport, Iowa.¹⁰

BRIDGEPORT, ALA., Dec. 19, 1863.

GENERAL: I respectfully report as follows of the part taken by this regiment in the battle of Mission Ridge on the 25th day of November, 1863. On the morning of the 25th we left Lookout Mountain at 10 o'clock; passed through Chattanooga Valley, and arrived at the front of Mission Ridge at 2 P. M. We had just formed in line of battle for an attack, when the enemy's artillery became so annoying that we commenced to gain distance to the right for a more vulnerable point of attack. A messenger having now arrived with the intelligence that two regiments of rebel cavalry had passed down the mountain for the purpose of turning our left flank, General Osterhaus ordered me to take a position up the valley in the direction of the rebel cavalry, with my own regiment and the Twenty-sixth Iowa. The skirmishing soon became very brisk on the right, with intimations of a general attack on our left. A division of the Fourth Corps now relieved me, and I at once reported back to my division, but had no sooner arrived at my former position than General Osterhaus informed me that the enemy was endeavoring to gain the mountain pass between Chattanooga Valley and Rossville, and that I must gain it first and hold it at all hazards. I proceeded as ordered and held that pass till dark, securing one six-pound gun, one loaded ammunition wagon, and 27 prisoners, (including three Lieutenants,) and a quantity of corn meal and bacon. I am happy to say I have no casualties to report.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE A. STONE,

Colonel Commanding Twenty-fifth Iowa.

ADJUTANT GENERAL N. B. BAKER, Davenport, Iowa.¹¹

BRIDGEPORT, ALA., Dec. 19, 1863.

GENERAL: I respectfully make the following report of the part taken by my regiment in the battle of Ringgold, or Taylor's Ridge, Ga., on the 27th of November last, with the list of casualties of that day. Our division had the advance that morning, and we had not anticipated the stubborn resistance the enemy would make there, or at least were not wholly prepared for it; or perhaps, better still, both. We approached the hill or mountain by a right flank, perpendicularly to the face of the mountain, and, in order to get into line of battle, had to front and change front forward on first company. Regiments therefore got into line of battle alternately, an evolution that more or less endangered each regiment to loss, without leaving it any means for defense or protection. My position being on the extreme left, I came into line last, and, when formed, found myself in open ground, and in easy range of the enemy above us, protected by abatis and breastworks. The fire here was very annoying, but the men responded so promptly to my command "Forward, double quick," that we cleared the open field and gained the base of the hill, with the loss of but three men. The duty assigned me was this: to gain the crest as best I could and turn the enemy's left flank. The hill up which I had to go was very steep, a valley to my right and left running perpendicularly to the base of the mountain, and above a long range of rocks, barricades, etc. I was there exposed to three fires, namely, direct right, left and oblique. I discovered, by their battle flags, that two regiments confronted me, and, considering the odds about proper for an Iowa regiment, ordered an advance. The enemy had his skirmishers admirably posted and in strong force. The hillside was stubbornly contested, but we pressed steadily forward, and, in an hour from the time we started, had advanced to within seventy-five yards of the crest of the hill and driven the enemy completely off of it to his fortification.

I now occupied a splendid position, and, preparatory for a final charge, had ordered a halt for the men to obtain a few moments' rest. Three regiments of the Twelfth Corps now came up over the ground I had won by fighting, one passing on my right, one through the Thirtieth Iowa, still further to my right, and the remaining one through my line. I attempted to stop this silly maneuver of advancing, where men could barely climb, by a flank, and ordered and entreated the officers to go to my left and advance in line of battle, properly, with their skirmishers well forward. I pointed to them the fire they must meet, from three points, so soon as they passed my line, and reminded them that their men would be shot down like sheep, as marching thus, by a flank, they could not possibly return the fire. All to no purpose, however. An officer of a Pennsylvania regiment said they would show western troops how to storm a hill, and that they were acting under orders, etc. They passed above me, and at once the fire of the enemy ceased, and at a glance I discovered the reason. He saw this column coming up by a flank, and commenced at once to mass a fresh column on its flank. Again I went to the officer, pointed out his situation, showed him where the rebels were massing; but he would listen to nothing, and went forward. A moment of agonizing suspense to me, and the fire opened on them from the three places designated. I never heard a more terrific and incessant fire of musketry. The men stood manfully for a minute—till the next volley was being poured into them—and then, like a flock of frightened sheep, and with exclamations: "We are flanked—they are coming—they are coming," came rushing down upon us, carrying everything before them, like an avalanche, and as far as we could see they were still running shamefully to the rear. I am credibly informed they organized again more than a mile from the scene of this disaster. My men were thrown into temporary confusion, but I at once re-formed in range of the enemy's fire, and, taking the hill at a new point, threatening to flank him in return, again commenced to climb the hill. Our entire brigade was now ordered forward, and this time we gained the hill, and, as regiment after regiment of the Iowa Brigade gained the plateau above us, the rebels, now threatened at every point, fled in confusion, and the battle of Ringgold was over.

I lost 29 wounded, none killed, none missing. . . . Of 21 officers in the fight, one-third of them were struck. The day following the battle orders were issued reorganizing our division. We are now in the Third Brigade, First Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, Lieutenant Colonel Palmer commanding the regiment, and I commanding the brigade.

Very respectfully, General, your obedient servant,

GEORGE A. STONE,

Colonel Twenty-fifth Iowa Volunteers.

ADJUTANT GENERAL N. B. BAKER, Davenport, Iowa.¹²

It is always the duty of a commanding officer to take advantage of every opportunity that offers to protect his men from the fire of the enemy in battle. To do this he must carefully study the position of the enemy and, in advancing to the attack, avail himself of the conformation of the ground over which he has to pass, and, if possible, strike the enemy in flank; in short, to execute the movements he is ordered to make with military skill and good judgment, and, while strictly obeying the orders he has received, accomplish the desired results with the smallest possible loss. In the dreadful game of war much depends upon the skill and ability with which the commanding officer handles his troops. While heavy losses cannot always be avoided, it is always a credit to the commanding officer to achieve a victory over the enemy with the loss to his own command reduced to the minimum. Thus, in the series of battles around Chattanooga, in which the Twenty-fifth Iowa participated—Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge and Ringgold—Colonel Stone's official reports clearly show that he obeyed implicitly every order which he received, and that his regiment accomplished all that was required of it with comparatively small casualties. Colonel Stone and the officers of his regiment had freely exposed themselves to the fire of the enemy, and, as shown in the battle of Ringgold, had suffered more severely, in proportion to their number, than the men under their command. This certainly was greatly to their credit. Both officers and men had fully sustained the high reputation they had previously won for the regiment. It will be noted that, immediately after the battle of Ringgold, Colonel Stone was honored by being placed in command of the brigade to which his regiment was attached, and that Lieutenant Colonel Palmer succeeded him as regimental commander.

After the battle of Ringgold the regiment, with its brigade and division, returned to Chattanooga, and, a few days later, marched to Bridgeport, Ala., where it remained until December 23d, on which date the division was ordered to proceed to Woodville, on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, at which place it went into winter quarters. Colonel Stone's Brigade was engaged in two expeditions during the winter. The first of these expeditions ended at the town of Lebanon, Ala., at which place and vicinity there were a considerable number of citizens who had remained true to the cause of the Union, many of whom came to Colonel Stone's camp, where they were organized into companies and furnished with arms and ammunition. They subsequently became part of a Union regiment and rendered good service to their country. Upon his return to Woodville, Colonel Stone was ordered to proceed to Cleveland, East Tenn., at which place his command constituted a garrison for the post until early in March, 1864, when the brigade rejoined the division at Woodville, where it remained until the beginning of the great Atlanta campaign, in which it was to take a most conspicuous part.

To give a detailed description of the operations of the Twenty-fifth Iowa during the remainder of its term of service would far exceed the limitation of space to which the compiler of this condensed historical sketch is subjected. He can, therefore, only give the outlines of its splendid service during the Atlanta campaign, its subsequent march to the sea and, from Savannah, through the Carolinas to Washington. The regiment had—prior to the commencement of the campaign—been again placed in a brigade composed exclusively of Iowa troops, as follows: The Fourth, Ninth, Twenty-fifth and Thirty-first regiments of Iowa Infantry. These four regiments remained together until the close of the war and became known throughout the army as the "Iowa Brigade of the Fifteenth Corps." Colonel J. A. Williamson of the Fourth Iowa, by virtue of his seniority in rank, became the commander of the brigade, and Colonel Stone resumed command of the Twenty-fifth Iowa. Colonel Williamson had entered the service with his regiment early in 1861, and had succeeded to the command of the regiment when Colonel Dodge was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General. The brigade, therefore, came under the command of an officer with a distinguished record. He had long been in command of a brigade and had well earned the promotion to the full rank of Brigadier General.¹³ The record of the Twenty-fifth Iowa is practically identified with that of the Fourth, Ninth and Thirty-first during the campaigns which ensued to the close of the war. On the 1st of May, 1864, the brigade and division marched from Woodville to join the army at the front. It first met the enemy in fierce conflict at Resaca, Ga. The operations of the brigade in that battle are fully described in the official report of Colonel Williamson, from which the following extract is made:

About 10 o'clock on the 13th instant the brigade was ordered into line of battle immediately on the left of the First Brigade, where it remained for two or three hours, when I received orders to move my brigade forward, which I did, taking the direction and keeping the alignment of the First Brigade until I arrived near the fortified hill from which the enemy kept up a heavy fire of artillery and musketry. At this point I halted, keeping my right aligned with the First Brigade, and advancing my left wing so as to bring them under cover, where I remained until the enemy fell back, when I advanced, with the First Brigade on my right, and took possession of the hill immediately in front of the enemy's fortifications, where I remained, skirmishing until a late hour at night. On the morning of the 14th, commenced skirmishing at daylight, and kept it up all day, suffering considerable loss. Late in the afternoon of the 14th, I was ordered by General Osterhaus to send one regiment to support a battery which was engaging the enemy's fortifications. In obedience to this order, I sent the Twenty-fifth Iowa, Colonel Stone. A little later in the evening I was ordered to send a regiment to support the First Brigade, which was assaulting the enemy's line on my right, and, in obedience thereto, sent the Twenty-fifth Iowa, and moved the Fourth Iowa into position to support the battery. I remained in line of battle during the night of the 14th, skirmishing until a late hour, and again resumed the skirmishing at daylight on the 15th, and continued it through the day and until late at night. At daylight on the 16th, I received an order from General Osterhaus to advance into the town of Resaca, the enemy having evacuated it during the night. I have only to say in conclusion, that there was neither straggling nor cowardice in my command. All were anxious to do their duty.¹⁴

Colonel Williamson reports the casualties in his brigade at Resaca as follows: Killed, 6; wounded, 37; total, 43. Colonel Stone reports the casualties in the Twenty-fifth Iowa: Killed, 3; wounded, 15; total, 18.¹⁵ It will thus be seen that the regiment sustained a loss of one-half the number killed, and nearly one-half the number wounded, in the four regiments of its brigade at the battle of Resaca.

In his next official report, dated at "Camp, near Lovejoy's Station, September 5, 1864," Colonel Williamson describes the movements and operations of his brigade at length, covering the entire period of the campaign, including its movements prior to the battle of Resaca, in which, however, it did not come into conflict with the enemy. From this report the compiler will endeavor to give a condensed account of the part taken by the Twenty-fifth Iowa in this campaign,—one of the most important and vigorously conducted campaigns of the entire war.¹⁶ A summary of the report shows that, on May 16th, the Twenty-fifth Iowa was on duty as provost guard in the village of Resaca. Between the dates May 17th and 20th, the regiment marched with its brigade from Resaca to Kingston, Ga. Remaining in camp at Kingston for three days, it continued the march to Dallas, and arrived in front of that place on the 26th of May. In the skirmishes and heavier fighting, which ensued and lasted until the 31st of May, the Twenty-fifth Iowa bore a conspicuous part, and again demonstrated fully the bravery and efficiency of its officers and men. During the night of May 28th, Williamson's brigade had built a complete line of defensive works. On the 29th, it occupied and continued to strengthen the works, all the time under the fire of the enemy. Soon after dark on the 29th, the brigade was ordered to leave the works and take a position on the main road, to cover the rear of the corps which was then moving out. As soon as the movement began, the enemy made a vigorous attack, when the Ninth and Twenty-fifth Iowa were ordered back to the original position, where they remained until daylight, holding the enemy in check, when they were joined by the other two regiments of the brigade, which remained in the works during the 30th and 31st of May, successfully defending them, and delaying the advance of the enemy. At daylight, on June 1st, the brigade was ordered out of the works to another line one mile in the rear, which had been constructed to cover the withdrawal of the corps. When the corps had passed the works, the brigade moved out and acted as rear guard on the march to New Hope Church, the enemy following closely, as far back as Dallas.

The enemy fell back on the night of June 4th, and the brigade continued the march to Ackworth, where it arrived on June 6th, and remained in camp until the 10th, when it again moved forward toward Kenesaw Mountain, and, on June 11th, had reached a position in front of that stronghold of the enemy. During the contest for the possession of Kenesaw Mountain, which lasted for twenty-one days, the endurance and bravery of the officers and men of Williamson's Iowa Brigade was put to the severest test, and the Twenty-fifth fully maintained the record it had made at Vicksburg, while engaged in much the same character of service it had rendered in that great siege. The frowning heights of Kenesaw proved equally as impregnable to direct assault as had the works around Vicksburg. On June 27th a general assault upon the enemy's strong line of works along the face of the mountain was ordered, in which the Twenty-fifth Iowa, with its brigade, participated and suffered considerable loss. The assault was unsuccessful, and the brigade returned to its line of works, from which it kept up an incessant fire upon the enemy's line until the night of July 2d, when the enemy evacuated his line of defenses on Kenesaw Mountain, and began his retreat in the direction of Atlanta. The enemy fell back slowly, stubbornly resisting the advance of the Union army, and there were frequent skirmishes, in which the Twenty-fifth Iowa and the other regiments of its brigade participated.

On July 20th the brigade marched near to Atlanta and built a line of earthworks. On July 21st it again advanced and built another line of works, but had only just completed and occupied the new line when it was ordered—on the morning of July 22d—to move about three-fourths of a mile to the west and occupy a line of works which the rebels had abandoned on the night of the 21st. Then followed the hard-fought battle of July 22d, 1864, in front of Atlanta, the rebels attacking the Union lines in heavy force. In that battle the Twenty-fifth Iowa shared the honors won by its brigade, and suffered its proportion of the loss of 5 killed, 2 missing and 29 wounded. From the 22d to the 29th of July the regiment was actively engaged in the siege operations with its brigade. On July 28th the rebels made another attack in heavy force, ending in their repulse. The heaviest part of this day's fighting was to the right of the position occupied by Williamson's brigade and, consequently, it took only a minor part in the engagement. On July 30th, the brigade moved to the extreme right of the army and occupied that position until August 6th, when it moved one mile to the front and built a new line of works, in which it remained—expecting an assault from the enemy every day—until August 13th, on which date it participated in an attack, made by its brigade and division, on the enemy's skirmish line, making a complete success, and capturing nearly the entire force of the enemy in the rifle pits.

Active demonstrations were continued almost daily against the rebel works until August 18th, and there were some casualties nearly every day in each of the regiments of the brigade. On August 19th the line was again advanced, the Twenty-fifth and Thirty-first Iowa taking the advance and digging new intrenchments. The advanced line was occupied until August 26th, when Colonel Williamson was ordered to move his brigade further to the right of the army, for the purpose of reaching and destroying the railroad on that side of Atlanta. The brigade started at dark on the 26th and marched all night and until 10 A. M. of the 27th; rested until the morning of the 28th, when the march was resumed and the Montgomery Railroad reached at 11 A. M. The brigade took position on each side of the road, and, while the Fourth and Twenty-fifth Iowa were engaged in building a line of defensive works to guard against a sudden attack of the enemy's cavalry, the Ninth and Thirty-first Iowa were engaged in destroying the railroad. After completing the work, the brigade marched on August 30th to a point one mile north of Jonesborough, where, on August 31st, it again came into conflict with the enemy and, after a severe fight, repulsed the attack, the enemy retiring with heavy loss. On the 2d of September the brigade, with the entire division, was sent in pursuit of the retreating forces of the enemy and, upon coming up with the rebel rear guard, a sharp engagement ensued. On the 3d, 4th and 5th of September the regiment was almost constantly on the skirmish line. On the night of the 5th, the division was ordered to return to Jonesborough and go into camp. Atlanta had fallen, and the victory was complete. The total casualties in the brigade during the campaign were 281, and, of this number, the Twenty-fifth Iowa lost 8 enlisted men killed, 4 officers and 49 enlisted men wounded and 4 enlisted men captured. Total loss in the regiment, 65.¹⁷ It may be regarded as a singular coincidence that the regiment should have had precisely the same number of casualties in the Vicksburg campaign. At the close of his report Colonel Williamson says:

¹⁷War of the Rebellion Official Records, Series 1, Vol. 38, Part 3, page 113. Official reports of casualties in Atlanta Campaign.

So closes the record of this memorable campaign. I could not make it more brief and do justice to the regiments of the brigade. The vast amount of labor done by this command, in addition to the marching and fighting, and the cheerfulness and zeal with which it has been performed, is sufficient to encourage the best hopes for the success of our army. The troops have neither hesitated nor murmured at any privation or labor. To the officers and men I owe a debt of gratitude for their prompt and willing obedience to orders.

On the 8th of September the regiment went into fortified camp at East Point, where it remained until the 4th of October, when it joined in the rapid pursuit of the rebel General Hood's army. The pursuit was continued by forced marches until October 16th, when the regiment went into camp on the bank of Little River, Ala., in sight of Lookout Mountain. October 20th, the regiment participated in a skirmish with the rebel General Wheeler's cavalry. On October 26th, the countermarch began and, on the 12th of November, the regiment was again in camp near Atlanta. With only a brief rest, after its long and toilsome march, it joined the army of General Sherman in his famous march to the sea. During this memorable march the Twenty-fifth Iowa performed its full share of duty and, on December 21, 1864, closed the triumphal march at Savannah, where it went into camp and enjoyed a brief period of rest. Colonel Williamson was at this time promoted to the command of a division, and Colonel Stone again succeeded to the command of the brigade, which he continued to command until the close of the next campaign, and the end of the war. Lieutenant Colonel Palmer again succeeded to the command of the regiment, which he also retained until the close of the war. The operations of his brigade, in that last great march through the Carolinas and on to Washington, are fully described in the official report of Colonel Stone, and, for the purpose of showing the part taken by the Twenty-fifth Iowa, in that closing campaign, the following extracts are taken from the report¹⁸:

In accordance with orders, I respectfully report a summary of the part taken by this command in the campaign just ended. The campaign commenced on the 10th day of January, and ended, with my command, on the 26th day of March, 1865, making the duration two months and sixteen days. On the 10th of January last I had orders to march from our camp near Savannah, Ga., to Fort Thunderbolt. On the 12th of January, I took shipping at Fort Thunderbolt for Beaufort, S. C., with all the regiments of my command, save one, (the Twenty-fifth Iowa,) which was left behind to assist in fetching up the transportation of the division. This regiment reported to me at camp near Beaufort, S. C., on the 14th day of January, 1865. On the 27th day of January, we broke up camp and resumed the march. During the campaign this brigade has had four engagements with the enemy; first at Little Congaree Creek, near Columbia, S. C., on the 15th day of February, 1865. The Second Brigade had the advance that day, and commenced skirmishing with the enemy within two miles of the camp we had left that morning. They drove the enemy without further assistance until near Little Congaree Creek, when, from the nature of the ground, the enemy was enabled to make a stubborn resistance. Here my brigade was ordered up, and went into position on the left of the Second Brigade.

After describing the gallant part taken by the Fourth and Ninth Iowa in the engagement, (the other regiments of the brigade having, in the meantime, been held in reserve,) the report makes reference to the part taken by the Twenty-fifth Iowa, as follows:

The whole division now crossed and formed a line of battle on a plateau about a mile from the creek. I again went into position on the left. Some rebel cavalry skirmishers threatening my front, I moved on them with four companies of the ¹⁸Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1866, pages 423 to 426 inclusive.

Twenty-fifth Iowa, and we soon drove them back to their main line. . . . My next engagement with the enemy was at the city of Columbia, captured by my command on the 17th day of February, an official account of which, with the casualties, and the number of prisoners, was made to you, under date of the 19th of February.

The report referred to gives a graphic description of the capture of the city, in which each of the regiments of Colonel Stone's brigade bore a gallant part. After describing the preliminary movements which led up to the attack, Colonel Stone says:

Everything being now in readiness, the signal was given, and the assault made by all the regiments at the same time. The result proved no mistake either in planning or the execution. Before the enemy was hardly aware of it we were right into the skirmish pits and scattering them in every direction. The Thirtieth Iowa here captured 23 prisoners. I accompanied this regiment in the charge, and can by personal observation testify to the gallant manner in which they made it. In front of the Island are a number of small bayous running parallel to the river about 20 feet wide and waist deep; few stopped to find logs on which to cross, but plunged in, holding guns and cartridge boxes above the water. The enemy seeing his skirmish line destroyed, and the eagerness with which our success was being followed up, became confused and soon broke, leaving our way open to the city. . . . When within a mile of the city, a carriage was discovered approaching, flying a flag of truce. It proved to contain Mr. Goodwin, Mayor of Columbia, and the city aldermen, who came to offer terms of capitulation. After some words had passed, they unconditionally surrendered to me the city of Columbia. . . . Proceeding to the State House with Captain Pratt, I planted the first United States flag on that building. To Iowa alone is credit to be given for capturing the capital of the State that has been disloyal since the days of John C. Calhoun, and the contemplated Capital of the Confederacy, as none but Iowa troops were engaged.

I did not meet the enemy again in any force till the 20th instant, on our march that day from our camp near Cox's bridge on the Neuse River toward Bentonville. The Second Brigade, Colonel Catterson, had the advance that day, and skirmished freely with the enemy, driving him easily until we had arrived within about three miles of Bentonville. The enemy here became stubborn, and threatened an attack on the Second Brigade. I was ordered up and went into position on Colonel Catterson's left. We now advanced our line of battle of two brigades about half a mile, and put up works. About 3 o'clock P. M., I was directed by Brevet Major General Woods, commanding the division, and also by Major General Logan, commanding the corps, to take three regiments, and, if possible, clear the road in our front, and open communication with the Fourteenth Corps, now fighting apparently about a mile from us on our left front. I placed the Twenty-fifth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Palmer commanding, (which regiment I had ordered out about an hour before as skirmishers,) to take the advance, and directed the Thirtieth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Roberts commanding, and the Thirty-first Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins commanding, to follow as a reserve. The Twenty-fifth Iowa was deployed as skirmishers, with their colors in the road I was going to clear, and my first movement with the regiment was to change direction to the right. This movement was made steadily until about three-fourths of the regiment had crossed the road, when our proximity to the rebels on my left and in the road caused very severe skirmishing. Two regiments of the Second Division now came up on my left rear, (I think the Sixth Missouri and Thirtieth Ohio,) one of them, the Sixth Missouri, deployed as skirmishers. I made arrangements with the officer commanding the last mentioned regiment to join the two regiments with mine, and, at a given signal, the Twenty-fifth Iowa and Sixth Missouri should make a charge. The charge proved entirely successful, although at a severe loss in the Twenty-fifth Iowa. We drove the enemy's skirmishers, composed of Hoke's division from the Virginia army, back to their works across the swamp, clearing the road, and opening communication with the Fourteenth Corps. The officers and men of the Twenty-fifth Iowa behaved handsomely and fought desperately. Lieutenant Colonel Palmer, commanding the regiment, and Captain Allen, acting Major, (who lost his right leg in the engagement,) deserve notice for exposing themselves freely, and for the gallant manner in which they cheered their men forward. At night I retired to a new line, and my place was occupied by other troops. . . .

On the 21st instant I had orders to erect a new line of works on the skirmish line, and at 10 o'clock P. M. I moved three regiments to the front line, the Fourth Iowa on the right, connecting on the left of the First Brigade, Brevet Brigadier General Woods commanding; the Thirtieth Iowa in the center; and the Ninth Iowa on the left. The Twenty-fifth Iowa and Thirty-first Iowa were in the rear, held in reserve. We put up a temporary line of works under fire of the enemy, and at 2 o'clock I received orders to charge the enemy's skirmish line, 150 yards in my front, in good skirmish pits. We captured the pits with but slight loss, but the enemy evinced so much determination to regain them that the fighting became very sharp. The enemy's main line of battle, behind good works, was by actual measurement but 100 yards from these skirmish pits, and he fired from the works by volley. At three different times they followed up the fire by volley by an assault on my skirmishers. Their men swarmed over the works and charged gallantly, but I had reinforced the line until I had nearly a line of battle, and our incessant firing prevented him from charging as a perfect organization, and every charge was repulsed. The order came to me so positively, from Generals Howard and Logan, to hold the ground I had already gained, that I should have done so, or ruined the brigade. At night I relieved the skirmishers' line with the Thirty-first Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins commanding. Colonel Jenkins managed the new line admirably. It rained a good deal during the night, but his men worked faithfully, and he put up quite a strong line of works so near the enemy that the conversation had to be carried on in whispers. Captain Teale of the Fourth Iowa deserves special notice for his gallantry in holding the most exposed and dangerous part of the line. I regret to announce this gallant young officer was severely wounded in the leg. Lieutenant Colonel Nichols and Major Anderson, of the Fourth Iowa, deserve mention for voluntarily going on the skirmish line when there was some wavering manifested. Captain Bowman, of my staff, also exposed himself freely and deserves notice. I mention these officers from personal observation, as twice during the day I deemed it my duty to go on the skirmish line myself. The other officers on the skirmish line, Captain Inman, Ninth Iowa, Lieutenant Shields, Fourth Iowa, Lieutenant Sharp, Ninth Iowa, Lieutenant Reffley, Thirtieth Iowa, are all reported to me to have behaved well and set a good example to their men. The loss in the skirmish line was quite severe. I sent you an official list of casualties the same night, and of the prisoners captured.

On the morning of the 22d, half an hour before day, I rode out to the advanced post, and ordered a patrol forward to feel of the enemy; but it was discovered that he had left during the night. I at once sent word to the General commanding division, and, with a detachment of the Thirty-first Iowa, followed him. Everything indicated a precipitate retreat; a few stragglers were picked up; some of their dead and wounded were found near the roadside uncared for, and quite a number of small arms, haversacks and clothing were found scattered in their deserted camp. Just at sunrise I ran onto their rear guard, composed of cavalry, and my detachment being too small to fight it, I covered the road with a few men to make an effect, and ordered some ten or fifteen men as skirmishers to annoy the enemy until a regiment, the Thirty-first Iowa, which I had just ordered up, should arrive. Very soon after this our entire division moved to Bentonville, where we remained during the day, and, at sundown, we returned to the camp we had left in the morning. The graves of 17 rebel officers in my front indicate that the enemy suffered severely in killed and wounded.

On our march to Goldsboro, on the 23d inst., I had the good fortune to have the post of honor—rear guard for the "Army of the Tennessee." The rear of my command fell upon the Twenty-fifth Iowa. On the 24th inst., I was ordered to remain at the pontoon bridge over the Neuse River, near Goldsboro, to cover the crossing of our corps train, and, on the 26th inst., I rejoined the division in camp near Goldsboro. During the campaign just closed, this brigade has been in four engagements with the following loss: Killed, 7; wounded, 64; missing, 12. We have captured, and turned over to the provost marshal, 145 prisoners of war. In taking Columbia, S. C., we captured 43 pieces of artillery, about 5,000 stand of arms, immense quantities of ammunition and ordnance stores, and released 40 officers confined there. We have marched 485 miles, built 15,037 yards of corduroy roads, and destroyed 3 miles of railroad. The brigade is in excellent health and spirits, but very ragged. My thanks are due to all my staff officers, Captain John N. Bell, Twenty-fifth Iowa, A. A. Q. General; Lieutenant Samuel W. Snow, Twenty-fifth Iowa, A. A. A. General; Captain

A. Bowman, Ninth Iowa; Lieutenant Baron H. Crane, Twenty-fifth Iowa; Lieutenant D. Rorick, Thirty-first Iowa—now in the hands of the enemy—and J. W. Gilman, Thirty-first Iowa, A. A. Q. M., for the zeal and earnestness with which they have discharged their whole duty in the campaign just ended.¹⁹

As will be seen from Colonel Stone's report, his regiment and brigade took a most conspicuous part in the battle of Bentonville, which was the last general engagement of the closing campaign of the war. The Iowa regiments composing his brigade had been assigned to the duty of holding a position of vital importance in that battle, and, under the immediate orders and direction of two of the most distinguished officers of the Union Army, they nobly performed their duty and upheld the honor and credit of their State, whose soldiers had won distinction in all the hardest fought battles of the war.

From Goldsboro, the Twenty-fifth Iowa moved, with its brigade and division, to Raleigh, and thence, after the surrender of the rebel General Johnston and his army, to Washington, D. C. On the 24th of May, 1865, the regiment, with its brigade, under command of its gallant leader, Brevet Brigadier General George A. Stone, participated in that greatest military pageant of modern times—the grand review at Washington. It then went into camp near Washington, and was there mustered out of the service of the United States on the 6th day of June, 1865. Soon after being mustered out, the regiment was provided with transportation to Davenport, Iowa, where it was formally disbanded, and the officers and men departed for their homes, there to resume and discharge their duty as citizens, with the same fidelity they had shown while serving their country as soldiers. Among all the splendid regiments from Iowa, which had marched and fought under the folds of the dear old flag, none reflected greater honor upon the State than its Twenty-fifth Infantry. None rendered more important or effective service.

The compiler extends an old soldier's cordial greeting to the surviving members of the Twenty-fifth Iowa Infantry. He has endeavored to perpetuate the memory of the men who composed the regiment and were its history makers. Their personal record of service will be found in the roster which follows this sketch. It is made up from the official reports and returns contained in the military archives of the State and of the War Department in Washington, and is only a transcript of what is found there recorded. It does not and cannot be made to show the details of the service they performed or what they endured and suffered. Many of those who served during the entire term of the regiment, and who may have been engaged in every battle in which it participated, but who were so fortunate as to have been saved from death, or serious injury from wounds or disease, have only the record of continuous service. They were mustered in with the regiment and mustered out with it, and were, therefore, completely identified with its history. But few of the officers or men received special mention for acts of gallantry, but all are frequently commended in the official reports for having bravely performed their duty. Some errors and omissions may appear in these personal records; some names may not have been correctly spelled, and, in some cases, injustice may have been done in the making up of the original records and perpetuated in the transcript. While such errors, if found, are greatly to be regretted, they were unavoidable, and it is hoped and believed that, in the main, the records will be found correct.²⁰

²⁰Lieutenant Colonel David J. Palmer, surviving commander of the Twenty-fifth Iowa, informed the compiler of this sketch that the name of Charles W. Payne, of Company B, should have appeared in the report of Colonel Stone as the soldier of Company B who was one of the Color Bearers of the regiment in the battle of Arkansas Post; and that Hiram Payne, who was a member of Company A, and who died at Vicksburg, August 25, 1865, was not one of the Color Bearers at Arkansas Post. The rosters of the two companies confirm this statement, showing that Hiram Payne was a Private in Company A, and that Charles W. Payne was the only soldier of that name in Company B, but the compiler could not change the name, as it appeared in the report and was, therefore, official.

Twenty-sixth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Infantry

TWENTY-SIXTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The records in the office of the Adjutant General of the State of Iowa show that the ten companies of which the Twenty-sixth Regiment of Infantry was composed were all enrolled in the County of Clinton. A number of other counties in the State were also represented in that organization, as shown by its original roster, but the largest number of enlistments were from Clinton County. The companies were ordered into quarters at Camp Kirkwood, near Clinton, Iowa, by the Governor, on dates ranging from July 5 to September 2, 1862. The organization of the regiment was in accordance with the proclamation of President Lincoln, bearing date July 2, 1862. Company A was mustered into the service of the United States August 30, 1862, by Captain H. B. Hendershott of the Regular Army, who also acted as Mustering Officer for all the other companies, eight of which, with the field and staff officers, were mustered on September 30, 1862. Company F was the last company to be mustered, (on October 1, 1862,) when the organization of the regiment was completed. The total number of enlisted men and company officers at the completion of the muster was 899. Early additional enlistments of 11 men brought the number up to 910, and, with the addition of the Field and Staff, the aggregate strength of the regiment, at the time it left the State, was 920 enlisted men and officers.¹ Colonel Milo Smith was chosen by Governor Kirkwood as commander of the regiment, and the wisdom of his choice was confirmed by the superior intelligence and energy exhibited by that officer from the day he assumed command. But a short time was given for instruction in drill and discipline before the regiment was ordered to take the field. The brief period was utilized, however, to the utmost advantage, and it may be truthfully said that the Twenty-sixth Iowa entered active service with a fair knowledge of the rudiments of military education, and appreciation of the necessity of strict discipline and obedience to orders. The opportunity to acquire additional instruction in the school of actual warfare, associated with other troops who had been in conflict with the enemy, was not long delayed.

The regiment left Camp Kirkwood under orders to report to Major General Curtis, at St. Louis, Mo., and, upon its arrival there, on the 25th of October, 1862, Colonel Smith received orders from General Curtis to proceed with his regiment to Helena, Ark., and report to the commanding officer at that place. The regiment arrived at Helena on October 28, 1862, was assigned to the First Brigade of the Fourth Division, Army of the Southwest, and went into its first camp in the enemy's country near Helena. The experience of the regiment while in this camp was the same as that of all the other troops encamped in that vicinity. It suffered much from sickness, the inevitable result of the bad weather conditions which prevailed and the change from the comforts of home life to the hardships and exposure inseparable from the life of the soldier on active duty in the field. This was the common experience of all the Iowa regiments in the early period of their service, but the conditions which the troops encamped near Helena encountered were uncommonly bad.

During the month of November, 1862, the regiment participated in two expeditions in which its division was engaged, under the command of General A. P. Hovey. One of these expeditions proceeded up White River to Devall's Bluff, the other to the Tallahatchie River in Mississippi, both intended to divert the attention of the enemy from the movement of General Grant's army, down the line of the Mississippi Central Railroad toward Vicksburg. Although no considerable force of the enemy was encountered upon either of these expeditions, the troops were subjected to very great hardships from exposure to the inclement weather, and the sickness which resulted subsequently caused the death of many good and faithful soldiers and left many more in such enfeebled condition as to render them unfit for further service. An examination of the roster shows that the casualties in the regiment during this period, by death from sickness and discharge from same cause, numbered forty-seven. Upon its return from the last of these expeditions, the regiment was attached to the Third Brigade, First Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, and soon afterwards became engaged in the preliminary operations which led up to the beginning of the great campaign which ended with the surrender of Vicksburg and the evacuation of Jackson, Miss. During these operations, which extended over the period from the 20th of December, 1862, to the 10th of August, 1863, the Twenty-sixth Iowa Infantry participated in every march and action in which its brigade and division was engaged. Its first encounter with the enemy was at the battle of Chickasaw Bayou, December 28, 1862.² Owing to its position—being held in reserve and protected from the fire of the enemy—the regiment sustained no casualties in that battle, but it was under fire, and was held in readiness to participate in the engagement had the order to move forward and join the troops who led the advance been received. The reserve force in every battle is an important factor. Its services may or may not be required at the front, but it is there to take the place of the troops who may be driven back, and, when called into action, often determines the result of the battle. The troops thus held in reserve may sometimes be in position to inflict considerable damage upon the enemy with but little if any loss to themselves.

In its next battle, however, the Twenty-sixth Iowa led the advance and, as will be seen, sustained the greatest loss of any of the regiments engaged, while several other regiments were held in reserve and suffered no loss. It must, therefore, be understood that, where a regiment is reported as having been part of a force engaged in battle in which the report shows that it suffered no loss, such statement does not imply any failure or neglect on the part of its officers and men to faithfully perform their duty.

On the 11th day of January, 1863, the regiment participated in the hard-fought battle of Arkansas Post. The brigade to which it was attached was commanded by Brigadier General John M. Thayer, and was composed of the following troops: Fourth, Ninth, Twenty-sixth, Thirtieth and Thirty-fourth Iowa Infantry, and the First Iowa Battery of Light Artillery.³ The fortune of ²Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1864, page 479. Official Reports of Colonel Milo Smith: Summary of Operations of Twenty-sixth Iowa Infantry.

³The compiler has been unable to find the official report of Colonel Smith, of the part taken by his regiment in this battle, either in the records of the Adjutant General of Iowa or those of the War Department; but, from the report of the brigade commander and other official historical sources, he has been able to procure the data from which his description of the conduct and loss of the regiment at Arkansas Post is given. The fact that Colonel Smith was wounded may account for the absence of any further report than that of the number of killed and wounded. See Foot-note No. 2.

war—with reference to losses of different regiments in the same brigade or division—is strikingly illustrated by the list of casualties among the troops composing the brigade with which the Twenty-sixth Iowa fought at Arkansas Post. It will be noted that only Iowa organizations were represented in the brigade, and there could be no question as to the courage or faithfulness to duty of any of them. The Fourth and Ninth Iowa had been through numerous hard-fought battles, and their record for bravery and heroic achievement was unsurpassed, and so remained to the close of the war; yet, in this battle—owing to the position in which they were placed—they suffered the least loss of any of the regiments of the brigade, while the heaviest loss was sustained by the Twenty-sixth Iowa in this the first battle in which it was actively engaged. In his official report, General Thayer thus describes the preliminary movements of his brigade and the positions of the regiments and battery:

My command disembarked from transports on the morning of the 10th. At dark, according to orders from General Steele, I moved around through an almost impassable swamp to a position on the right and above the fort, which we reached at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 11th. It was found impossible to get the wagons and artillery through in the night, and I was compelled to leave them. About noon my infantry moved forward into line of battle, the right resting on General Hovey's left. About this time my battery, the First Iowa, which had got through the swamp with great difficulty, came up and was placed in position on the right of my brigade. The action soon became general, the lines advancing. Owing to the thick underbrush and want of space for a front of the brigade, I at first advanced in column of regiments, deploying them into line as fast as we could get a front. The Twenty-sixth Iowa, Colonel Smith, being on the left, gained an advanced position and did good execution. This regiment had two commissioned officers and sixteen men killed, and ninety-nine wounded, including Colonel Smith, who was compelled to leave the field. The Thirtieth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Torrence, (Colonel Abbott being sick,) also occupied an advanced position and was warmly engaged, supported by the Thirty-fourth Iowa, Colonel Clark. The Fourth and Ninth Iowa, together with the Thirteenth Illinois and another regiment of General Blair's brigade, were held as a reserve, though exposed to the enemy's fire. The infantry and the battery fought well. Having my horse killed early in the engagement, I requested General Vandever, who had arrived two days previous and took temporary command of his old regiment, the Ninth Iowa, to assist me, and I am pleased to make my acknowledgments to him for very valuable services. . . .⁴

The Twenty-sixth Iowa, occupying the most advanced position on the extreme left of the attacking force, was exposed to a terrific fire of artillery and musketry from the enemy's works, but it never faltered, although many of its men and officers were killed and many more were disabled by wounds. It was a terrible first experience for these brave sons of Iowa to be thus placed in the very fore-front of the battle, but they fought with all the steadiness and courage of trained and seasoned veterans. In none of the numerous battles in which they were subsequently engaged did the men and officers show greater fortitude than while advancing against the rebel stronghold of Arkansas Post. It must be said that the rebel troops made a gallant defense and only yielded when it became evident that further resistance would result in their complete destruction. When the white flag was at last displayed above the fort, in token of surrender, the Twenty-sixth Iowa was among the first to enter and take possession of the works. The casualties in the Third Brigade of the First Division, as shown by the official reports, were as follows: Fourth Iowa Infantry, wounded, 2; Ninth Iowa Infantry, wounded, 2; Twenty-sixth Iowa Infantry, killed 18, wounded 99; Thirtieth Iowa Infantry, killed 5, wounded 38; Thirty-fourth Iowa Infantry, killed 1, wounded 15; First Iowa Battery, no casualties reported. It will thus be seen that the loss of the Twenty-sixth Iowa was very nearly two-thirds of the total loss of the entire brigade.⁵ The tabulated returns of casualties show that the two divisions of the Thirteenth Army Corps sustained a loss of 463, while the two divisions of the Fifteenth Corps lost 598; the aggregate loss of the Union army being 1,061. Of the forty-six regiments of infantry which composed the entire Union force, ten were presumably held in reserve, as they reported no casualties. There were, therefore, thirty-six regiments actively engaged, in some of which the casualties were small, while in others they were quite heavy. The total loss shows an average of a little less than 30 to each regiment, while the average loss in the Second and Third Brigades of the First Division—commanded by Generals Hovey and Thayer—was 36 to each regiment. Upon this ratio, the Twenty-sixth Iowa sustained a loss at Arkansas Post equivalent to more than three times the average of the combined loss of the Second and Third Brigades, and very nearly four times the average of the entire Union force engaged. The regiments nearest approaching the casualties sustained by the Twenty-sixth Iowa (a total of 117 killed and wounded) were the Eighty-third Ohio, 89; the Sixteenth Indiana, 82; the Third Missouri, 75; the Sixtieth Indiana, 70; the Seventy-sixth Ohio, 68; the Twenty-fifth Iowa, 55; the Seventy-seventh Illinois, 45, and the Thirtieth Iowa, 43. The total losses of these nine regiments aggregated 644, an average of seventy-one to the regiment, more than double the general average of the thirty-six regiments engaged. The Twenty-sixth Iowa had been in the field of active service less than three months at the time this battle was fought. The war had been in progress for more than eighteen months. Great battles had been fought, and among the troops of both the Thirteenth and Fifteenth Army Corps were regiments that had suffered heavy losses at Pea Ridge, Shiloh and on other noted battlefields. Yet the fortune of war gave to the Twenty-sixth Iowa in this conflict a most notable pre-eminence. Shortly after the battle, in a communication to Governor Kirkwood, General Thayer made the following statement: "No officer or regiment behaved better or did better fighting on that battlefield than Colonel Milo Smith and his regiment. They advanced to the front under a most galling fire, and in the most exposed part of the field, and held it till the action was over. Colonel Smith remained at his post till carried wounded from the field."

Among the killed were Lieutenants Peter L. Hyde and James S. Patterson, and among the wounded were Colonel Milo Smith, Adjutant Thomas G. Ferreby (very severely), Captain N. A. Merrell (severely), Lieutenants James McDill (mortally), Edward Svendsen (severely), and W. R. Ward (severely).⁶ An examination of the roster reveals the fact that many of the wounds received were so severe as to subsequently prove fatal, and many more resulted in permanent disability. Captain N. C. Roe, (who was subsequently for a time in command of the regiment,) in his account of the battle of Arkansas Post states that the Twenty-sixth Iowa went into action with an aggregate strength of 447 enlisted men and officers, lost 119 in killed and wounded, and that its loss was therefore over twenty-five per cent of the number engaged.⁷ The slight discrepancy, as to the number of casualties shown by this statement and the tabulated official return of General Sherman, does not change the actual percentage of loss to the number engaged. In either case it would stand at ⁶The names of all the killed and wounded, in this and in all the battles in which the regiment was engaged, together with the names of all those who died from wounds or disease, and all casualties from whatever cause, will be found noted in the subjoined roster.

over twenty-five per cent, as stated by Captain Roe. The compiler of this historical sketch, while recognizing the importance and magnitude of the service subsequently rendered by the regiment, is impressed by the fact that, among all the battles in which it afterwards bore so honorable a part, none reflect greater credit upon its record than that of Arkansas Post. Had the history of its service ended with that battle, its fame would have been secure. It was, however, but the beginning of its long list of splendid achievements.

On January 13, 1863, (the works at Arkansas Post having been destroyed after the surrender,) the Twenty-sixth Iowa, with the other troops, embarked on transports and moved down the river to Young's Point, four miles above Vicksburg. Landing there, the troops went into camp. At and near this place the regiment remained until the 2d of April. During this period the regiment performed its full share of arduous toil upon the canal, through which General Grant had expected to divert the course of the mighty river, but the great labor expended upon this undertaking did not accomplish the desired result. The sick list of the regiment rapidly increased and the number of officers and men able for duty was less than one-half the number shown upon the rolls. On April 2, 1863, the regiment, with its brigade and division, commanded by Major General Steele, embarked on transports and proceeded to Greenville, Miss., where the troops landed and marched into the interior. The object of the expedition was mainly for the purpose of diverting the attention of the enemy from the movements of General Grant's main army, but it accomplished more than that, in the capture of large quantities of supplies which the rebel troops had accumulated at different points, and which were intended for the use of the rebel troops in garrison at Vicksburg.⁸ The expedition penetrated the country to a distance of about forty miles east of Greenville. Brisk skirmishes with the enemy occurred, both upon the advance and return march, but the Twenty-sixth Iowa did not become engaged. On the return march, however, a detachment of the regiment, under command of Captain Charles M. Nye, while engaged in foraging, came in contact with the enemy and had five men captured. These men were subsequently exchanged and returned to the regiment. General Steele, having accomplished the object of his expedition, returned with his division to Young's Point, and, taking on board the camp guards and that portion of the camp equipage which had been left there, proceeded to Milliken's Bend, arriving there on April 27th.

On May 1, 1863, General Steele's Division left Milliken's Bend, marched to Grand Gulf and thence to Jackson, Miss., where it arrived on the 14th. On the 16th the march was resumed, and, on the 18th, the command arrived in front of the enemy's lines at Walnut Hills, in the rear of Vicksburg. During the march there had been several delays, and some skirmishes with the enemy had occurred, but the reports do not show that the Twenty-sixth Iowa was engaged with the enemy until May 18th, 19th and 22d, on which dates (particularly the latter) it sustained heavy losses.⁹ The fighting began at Walnut Hills late in the afternoon of the 18th and heavy skirmishing was kept up until dark. On the 19th the skirmishing was resumed and an attempt was made to ⁸The importance of the capture of these supplies was shown, when the rebel General Pemberton had retired with his army within the defenses of Vicksburg and found a great deficiency of provisions for his troops.

⁹The reports heretofore referred to, (Adjutant General of Iowa, for year 1864, pages 479 to 486, inclusive,) while comprehensive as to events are meager in details. They agree substantially as to the main facts connected with the history of the regiment during that period of its service, but there are some discrepancies as to dates and casualties, the more important of which the compiler has been able to reconcile, by reference to other official records showing the operations of Iowa regiments with which the Twenty-sixth was closely identified. Some of the details not contained in the reports of the Twenty-sixth have been obtained in the same way.

assault the enemy's works, which was unsuccessful. On May 22d the assault was renewed, with the same result. In these preliminary operations the Twenty-sixth Iowa bore a conspicuous part. Adjutant J. D. Fegan states that the regiment had two officers and three privates wounded in the skirmish on May 18th. Colonel Smith makes the following statement, with reference to the part taken by the regiment on the 19th and 22d: "My regiment was engaged in the assault of the 19th, 311 officers and men being present and actually engaged, losing 1 man killed, 4 officers and 8 men wounded. Had, on the 22d, 290 officers and men present and actually engaged, losing 5 men killed, 4 officers and 25 men wounded. On account of the favorable formation of the ground my regiment did not suffer so badly as it otherwise would have done in a more exposed position." Among those wounded were Colonel Milo Smith, Captain A. D. Gaston, and Lieutenants John W. Mason, Louis Rider, Noble W. Wood, John Quinn and William M. Magden. The failure to carry the enemy's strong works by direct assault necessitated a series of regular siege operations, which were continued until July 4, 1863, when the rebel stronghold surrendered. The Twenty-sixth Iowa performed its full share of duty during the siege. The regiment had sustained a loss of 6 killed and 46 wounded in its three engagements in the early days of the siege. On June 5th it had one man—Mathew Carraher—severely wounded, and, on June 15th, one man—William H. Wilcox—killed, making the number of casualties during the siege 54, (7 killed and 47 wounded,) seventeen per cent of the maximum number of the regiment present for duty on May 18th, the day upon which the initial engagement of the siege of Vicksburg occurred. Colonel Milo Smith, although suffering from his wounds, remained in command of the regiment and directed its movements during the siege. He was the only field officer on duty until May 24th, upon which date Lieutenant Colonel Ferreby returned and reported for duty. This gallant officer had been severely wounded at Arkansas Post and, as a reward for his meritorious conduct in that battle, had been promoted three grades above his former rank. He had only partially recovered from his wounds at the time of his return, but his patriotic devotion to duty and his anxiety to be with his regiment in the great struggle then in progress prevailed over the insistence of the surgeon that he should remain in hospital until he had fully recovered. Captain N. C. Roe had been detailed to act as a field officer to assist Colonel Smith, and continued to act in that capacity until relieved on June 2d.

Immediately after the surrender of Vicksburg, Colonel Smith was placed in command of the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Ferreby assumed command of the regiment. On July 5th, the brigade with its division moved with General Sherman's army against the rebel army commanded by General Johnston. In the operations against the enemy which ensued, ending with the evacuation of Jackson by Johnston's army and the pursuit of that army as far as Brandon, the Twenty-sixth Iowa was actively engaged, but without coming into actual conflict with the enemy. Returning from this short campaign, the regiment reached Black River Bridge on July 27th, and went into camp, where it remained until September 23d. The malarious conditions in the vicinity of this camp caused considerable sickness among the men and officers of the regiment during this period of inactivity and, when the order to break camp was received, indicating another active campaign, it was hailed with satisfaction.

On September 23d, the regiment marched to Vicksburg and, embarking on transports, was conveyed to Memphis, where it arrived September 28th, and moved thence by rail to Corinth, Miss., where it arrived on the 29th and went into camp, remaining there until October 9th, on which date it marched to Iuka, Miss. From the time of its arrival at Iuka until October 19th the regiment was engaged in guarding the railroad. On the 20th, the regiment marched to Cherokee, Ala., and on the 21st continued the march towards Tusculum. Between the 21st and 29th of October the regiment, in skirmishing with the enemy, had one man killed and one severely wounded. On November 4th the regiment again took up the line of march, crossed the Tennessee River at Chickasaw, and, marching thence by way of Florence, Pulaski, Stevenson and Bridgeport, arrived at Chattanooga on November 23d. On November 24th the regiment participated in the engagement on Lookout Mountain, on the 25th at Mission Ridge and on the 27th at Ringgold. During these three days of battle it lost four officers wounded and three enlisted men killed and nine wounded. The gallant Lieutenant Colonel Ferreby was again wounded at Lookout Mountain. The brave and intrepid Captain John L. Steele was severely wounded at Ringgold and died a few days later from the effects of the wound. Lieutenants Nathan D. Hubbard and William Nickel were also wounded at Ringgold. The regiment had marched 315 miles since entering upon the campaign, much of the time without tents and over difficult roads across the mountain ranges, and had engaged in several skirmishes and in three battles. Notwithstanding the hardships endured upon the march, the men had improved in health under the more favorable climatic conditions.

Shortly after the battle of Ringgold the regiment with its brigade returned to Bridgeport, Ala., where it arrived on December 5th. On December 14th, Colonel Milo Smith was assigned to the command of the First Brigade of the First Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, and Senior Captain N. C. Roe was placed in command of the regiment. On December 21st the brigade again took up the line of march and, on the 26th, arrived at Woodville, Ala., where it went into winter quarters. Adjutant J. D. Fegan in his official report states that there were 471 enlisted men and 31 commissioned officers on the rolls of the regiment on the 31st day of December, 1863, making its aggregate strength on that date 502. Under date of January 31, 1864, Captain N. C. Roe, then in command of the regiment, says: "Have just received new U. S. rifled muskets and complete accouterments. Men are well clothed and in fine spirits, ready to fall in at any time, encouraged by success on every field upon which the regiment has met the enemy."

On February 6, 1864, Captain John Lubbers, of Company E, was commissioned Major of the Twenty-sixth Iowa and assumed command of the regiment. Major Lubbers resumed the account of the operations of the regiment, from conclusion of the accounts of Captain Roe and Adjutant Fegan down to the 31st of December, 1864, and, from his report and other official data, the compiler has obtained the material for the condensed history, covering that period, which follows.¹⁰ The regiment lay in camp at Woodville during the winter of 1864, engaged in the discharge of regular camp and picket duties. A detachment of one hundred men and four officers of the Twenty-sixth Iowa, with other troops, under the command of Colonel Milo Smith, formed an expedition (date not given) to observe the movements of the enemy, which was successfully accomplished. The troops met and repulsed a force of the enemy while on this expedition, but the report does not show any casualties in the detachment from the Twenty-sixth Iowa, or give any details as to movements of the troops. On March 9, 1864, the regiment was ordered to move to Vienna, fourteen miles southwest from Woodville, and to establish an outpost at that place. The officers and men occupied the abandoned houses for quarters, and, in addition to regular picket duty, patrolled the country for a considerable distance from Vienna, along the Tennessee River. On April 21st, while a detachment from the regiment was engaged upon this duty, eight of its men were captured by the enemy.

On April 30th, the regiment rejoined the brigade at Woodville and, on May 1st, commenced the march towards Chattanooga, where it arrived on the 6th, marching thence by way of Gordon Mills and through Snake Creek Gap to Rasaca, Ga., where, on May 13th, it again encountered the enemy and lost one man killed and two wounded. On May 14th, the regiment was ordered to attack a force of the enemy in its front, on the opposite side of a creek. The officers and men of the Twenty-sixth Iowa gallantly advanced, waded the stream under a heavy fire, and drove the enemy from the field. This was the Twenty-sixth Iowa's contribution to the Union victory at Resaca, and was the second of its many conflicts with the enemy during the great Atlanta campaign. The loss sustained by the regiment in this battle was two killed and twenty-one wounded, four of whom died a few days later. The enemy evacuated his works at Resaca during the nights of the 15th and 16th of May, and the Union troops followed in swift pursuit, arriving at Kingston, Ga., on the 19th.

On May 20th, the Twenty-sixth Iowa was sent as guard for a railroad train to Rome, Ga., returning to Kingston on the 21st. On the 23d the regiment with its brigade again advanced and arrived in front of the enemy's works at Dallas, Ga., on the 26th. On the night of May 29th, the regiment lost one man mortally wounded and one missing, supposed to have been killed in repulsing an attack of the enemy. On June 1st the regiment moved to the support of the Second Division to a point near New Hope Church, where it remained until the 5th, when it marched to Ackworth, Ga., reaching that place on the 6th, and marching thence, on the 10th, to Big Shanty, Ga., where it was placed in position in front of the enemy's works and was under fire daily until the 26th, losing one officer, severely wounded, one man killed and six wounded. It then moved south in the Kenesaw Valley and took position in front of the enemy's works, exposed to the fire of the enemy's artillery. It lay in this position until July 2d, losing three men killed and four wounded. On the night of July 2d, the regiment, with its brigade and division, was relieved by other troops from the Fourteenth Corps, and then marched—during the night—back around Kenesaw Mountain (which had been evacuated by the enemy), and on to Marietta, Ga., arriving there at noon, July 3d.

From the 4th to the 22d of July the regiment, with its brigade and division, was engaged in a series of important movements, following those of the rebel army as it retired from one strong position to another, always moving in the direction of its stronghold at Atlanta. The record does not show that the regiment came directly into conflict with the enemy while it was taking part in these flanking movements of General Sherman's army, between the dates of July 4th and 22d. On the latter date, however, the line of works which had been evacuated by the enemy was occupied by the First Division of the Fifteenth Corps, to which the Twenty-sixth Iowa was attached, and, from that date to the close of the campaign, the regiment was actively engaged in all the movements of its brigade and division, except the two days, (August 31st and September 1st,) when it was temporarily detached and rendered important service with the Second Division of the same corps. The itinerary of the operations of the brigade, following the official report of its commander, Colonel Milo Smith of the Twenty-sixth Iowa, gives the dates of every important movement in which it participated, and the report describes each movement with particularity of detail, showing the part taken by each regiment. In this report the Twenty-sixth Iowa is given full credit for prompt and efficient performance of all the duties to which it was assigned.¹¹

The following named regiments constituted the brigade: Twenty-sixth and Thirtieth Iowa, Twenty-seventh Missouri and Seventy-sixth Ohio Infantry. In the official report of Major General Osterhaus, commanding the First Division, giving the aggregate strength of each of the regiments and brigades of his division, prior to the battle of Resaca, the number in each of the regiments of the First Brigade is given as follows:¹² Seventy-sixth Ohio, 526; Twenty-seventh Missouri, 279; Twenty-sixth Iowa, 292; Thirtieth Iowa, 331. Total strength of the brigade, 1,428. It will thus be seen that, at the time it entered upon this campaign, the Twenty-sixth Iowa had only about one-third the number of men with which it had left the State, in October, 1862. Just prior to going into the battle of Atlanta, on July 22d, 1864, the effective strength of the Twenty-sixth Iowa was reported as 182, while that of the entire brigade was reported as 1,063. In the engagements before Atlanta, on July 22d, the regiment sustained a loss of five men wounded, and on July 28th its loss was one officer and one man, both severely wounded. These comparatively small losses are accounted for by the fact that the regiment was on the reserve line on the 22d; and fought only on the skirmish line on the 28th. Its loss was, however, not far below the average of the brigade, which sustained a total loss of 44 killed and wounded, in the two engagements. On July 30th—the men being greatly exhausted by their incessant work in constructing earthworks and the constant duty of guarding against attacks from the ever active enemy—the regiment was ordered to the reserve line, where it remained until August 9th, when it was again advanced to the firing line at the front and, from that date until August 26th, was engaged in building works and skirmishing, losing one officer and three men killed and nine men severely wounded. During this time several prisoners were captured by the regiment.

On August 26th, the regiment with its brigade and division moved, with the Army of the Tennessee, to Fairburn, Ga., and, after destroying several miles of the railroad, marched to Jonesboro, where it again came into conflict with the enemy on August 31st, losing one officer and four men wounded during the engagement. On the 1st of September it was again engaged, and lost one officer and three men severely wounded. The enemy retreated to Lovejoy's Station, where another stand was made, and, on September 3d, the Twenty-sixth Iowa was engaged in another severe skirmish, in which it had four men severely wounded, and, on September 6th, had one man wounded while on the march toward East Point, Ga., where the regiment arrived on the 8th, and where it remained in camp until October 4th. The rebel General Hood had crossed the Chattahoochee River with his army, and the Army of the Tennessee was ordered to follow and attack him. The pursuit began on October 4th.

¹¹War of the Rebellion Official Records, Series 1, Vol. 38, Part 3, pages 147 to 151 inclusive. In the itinerary referred to is a list of the officers of the different regiments composing the brigade who were wounded in the various engagements which took place. Only the names of Major Lubbers, wounded at Kenesaw Mountain, June 16th, and Lieutenant E. F. Byng, wounded near Atlanta, July 22d, appear in this list. On page 113, same volume, the tabulated return of casualties during the Atlanta campaign shows that the Twenty-sixth Iowa had seven officers wounded. The names of these officers, as well as all those of the killed and wounded of the regiment, will be found in the subjoined roster.

¹²This report, together with others having reference either directly or indirectly to the operations in which the Twenty-sixth Iowa participated in the Atlanta campaign, covers pages 124 to 172, of Series 1, Vol. 38, Part 3, of the War of the Rebellion Official Records. The space thus occupied greatly exceeds that to which the compiler is limited for this entire historical sketch of the regiment. In order, therefore, to condense the description of its leading operations within the required limits, only such brief quotations can be made as will serve to show the general magnitude of the operations in which it was an important factor.

The rebel General declined to risk a general engagement and began a rapid retreat, which was continued toward the north. The pursuit was vigorously kept up. The roads were frequently found obstructed by fallen trees, and the rear guard of the enemy was encountered at several places, when heavy skirmishing occurred. On October 11th, several men of the regiment, who had become exhausted and halted to rest, were captured by a mounted party of the enemy who were hovering in the rear of the army. On October 16th the regiment encountered the rear guard of the enemy at Ship's Gap, and lost one man killed and four wounded. During this engagement the regiment captured thirty prisoners. On October 21st, at the crossing of Little Creek, Ala., the pursuit of Hood's army was abandoned. The troops started on the return march on October 29th, halting at different points for rest. On November 21st the regiment with its brigade and division reached Griswoldville, where it again confronted the enemy. On the 22d, the Second Brigade of the division, with part of the First Brigade, participated in another engagement, the rebels suffering heavy loss, while that of the Union troops was comparatively light. The Twenty-sixth Iowa was on the reserve line during this engagement, and sustained no loss.

The great Atlanta campaign had come to an end. The struggle had been tremendous. The glorious victory achieved by the armies commanded by General Sherman and the crushing defeat of the combined rebel armies clearly indicated that the tremendous conflict was nearing its close. The campaign just ended was one of the most remarkable in the military history of the world. While the Union troops had fought with sublime courage and had endured almost incredible hardships no less could be said of those misguided men who had fought against them, and, at the last, with the desperation of despair. It was a gigantic struggle between American soldiers who, upon the one side, fought for the preservation of a government which should be true to the basic principles of a free republic, and, upon the other, for the establishment of a government which would maintain and seek to perpetuate a system directly in conflict with the true principles of republican institutions.

During the campaign the Twenty-sixth Iowa had contributed its full share of fighting and endurance of privations. Its ranks were sadly diminished, but the courage of its survivors was unshaken. On November 13th, the regiment reached Atlanta and, halting there for a brief rest, again joined, with its brigade and division, in that most wonderful exploit of the war—the march of Sherman's Army to the sea. When the army reached Savannah, the Twenty-sixth Iowa was engaged in a foraging expedition, forty miles in the interior, from which it returned on December 23d and went into camp near Savannah. The regiment subsequently participated in that long and toilsome march through the Carolinas. It assisted in the capture of Columbia and, at Bentonville, had its last encounter with the enemy, losing in that engagement one man killed and eight wounded. On that field the battle record of the regiment was closed. At Helena, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, around Chattanooga, between Resaca, Atlanta and Lovejoy, and along the line of its march through the Carolinas and Virginia, the dead of the Twenty-sixth Iowa lie buried. Their graves are the silent witnesses of the heroism and devotion of this gallant Iowa regiment.

From Bentonville the regiment marched to Washington, and, soon after its arrival there, participated in that greatest military pageant of modern times—the grand review of the victorious armies of the Republic. As the Twenty-sixth Iowa marched down that splendid avenue of the Nation's Capital, following its flag, emblazoned with the long list of battles in which it had borne so honorable a part, the hearts of its heroic survivors were cheered by the tumultuous applause of the thousands of citizens who had assembled to honor the saviors of their country. The Twenty-sixth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers was mustered out of the service of the United States at Washington, D. C., June 6, 1865. Soon afterwards the regiment was conveyed to Clinton, Iowa, where it was finally disbanded. In concluding this brief and imperfect sketch of its service, the compiler can only say to the survivors of the regiment, that any errors or imperfections discovered in the subjoined revised roster are due to the records from which it has been transcribed. Great care has been taken to make the roster as nearly correct as possible, after the lapse of half a century from the date when the original roster was compiled. While it is to be greatly regretted that the work was not sooner undertaken, when a larger number of the survivors remained upon earth, the advantage and benefit accruing to posterity—in the preservation of the history of these military organizations and the personal records of the men who belonged to them—will be appreciated by all the loyal sons and daughters of the State of Iowa, and especially by those who, in the generations to come, can trace their ancestry to the brave men who fought to preserve and transmit to their posterity the best form of government that the wisdom of man has been able to devise.

Twenty-seventh Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Infantry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

TWENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The Twenty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers was organized under the proclamation of President Lincoln dated July 2, 1862. The ten companies of which it was composed were ordered into quarters by Governor Kirkwood on dates ranging from July 30 to August 26, 1862. The rendezvous designated in the order was Camp Franklin, near Dubuque, Iowa, and there the companies, together with the field and staff officers, were mustered into the service of the United States, by Captain George S. Pierce, of the Regular Army, on dates ranging from September 1 to October 3, 1862. At the completion of the muster of the last company, the regiment had an aggregate strength of 940.¹

The regiment remained but a short time at Camp Franklin after the completion of its muster into the service. On October 11, 1862, Colonel Gilbert was ordered to embark his regiment on transports and proceed to St. Paul, Minn., and there report to Major General John Pope, then in command of the Department of the Northwest. After disembarking at St. Paul, the regiment marched to Fort Snelling and went into camp near the Fort. At that time there were no hostile Indians in that vicinity. A few days after going into camp, Colonel Gilbert received orders from General Pope to march with six companies of his regiment to Mille Lacs, Minn., 125 miles north-west of St. Paul, for the purpose of superintending the payment of annuities to the friendly Indians in that section of the State. No hostile Indians were encountered on the march, and the object of the expedition was successfully accomplished. Upon his return to Fort Snelling, on November 4th, Colonel Gilbert was ordered by General Pope to embark the six companies on transports and proceed to Cairo, Ill., to which place the other four companies had been sent during his absence on the expedition. Upon arriving at Cairo the regiment was reunited and remained in camp until November 20th, on which date it again embarked and was conveyed to Memphis, Tenn.

On November 27th the regiment joined the army under Major General Sherman, with which it marched against the rebel army under General Price, then occupying a strongly intrenched position on the Tallahatchie River, below Waterford, Miss. This movement was made to reinforce the army under General Grant, then moving down the line of the Mississippi Central Railroad, with Vicksburg as its objective point. General Sherman succeeded in crossing the Tallahatchie and, by outflanking General Price's army, compelled him to evacuate his formidable works and retreat towards the south. The combined forces under General Grant pressed forward in pursuit of the enemy. His forward movement was suddenly checked, however, by the bold and successful raid of a force of the enemy's cavalry, under command of the rebel General Van Dorn, which succeeded in reaching and capturing General Grant's base of supplies at Holly Springs, thus compelling the abandonment of the expedition and the falling back of the army to the line of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. The Twenty-seventh Iowa, while participating actively in all the operations of the troops with which it was associated on this expedition, did not come into actual conflict with the enemy, and suffered no casualties except from sickness, and the capture of eleven of its men—who were in hospital—by a band of rebel cavalry. The men were paroled, however, and returned to the regiment the next day.

On December 31, 1862, the regiment, with other troops, was making a forced march to reinforce the troops under General Sullivan at Lexington, Tenn. The men were without tents or shelter of any kind and suffered intensely from exposure to the inclement weather. At the close of the year 1862 the regiment had lost 69 men, who had either died or been discharged as the result of sickness, while nearly 200 more were lying in hospitals, the victims of disease, many of whom subsequently died or were discharged on account of disability. It was the common experience of new regiments. In the first few months of their service disease claimed a far greater number of victims than the bullets of the enemy.

On January 1, 1863, the Twenty-seventh Iowa reached Lexington, after its long and arduous march, only to find that it was too late to participate in the conflict, General Sullivan having succeeded in defeating the rebel forces under General Forrest without the aid of reinforcements. The combined Union force immediately marched in pursuit of the retreating rebels, but did not succeed in overtaking them, the rebel General Forrest having safely effected the crossing of the Tennessee River at Clifton; and, upon the arrival of the Union troops at that place, the pursuit was abandoned. The Twenty-seventh Iowa then returned to Jackson, Tenn., where, for the greater portion of the time, it remained, performing the duties of provost, picket and train guards, until June 2, 1863. During this long period there were several short expeditions into the surrounding country for the purpose of gathering supplies, but there is no record of any portion of the regiment having come into contact with the enemy. The post at Jackson was an important one, however, and the regiment was performing important service while on duty there. The most notable event during this period was the moving of the regiment by rail to Corinth, Miss., early in February, 1863, which place it occupied as a garrison, while the troops which had been stationed there made a successful expedition to Tusculum, Ala., under command of General Dodge. The regiment was relieved from this duty and returned to Jackson on February 28th. During the month of May the regiment was engaged in guarding the line of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, from one to four of its companies being stationed at different points along the line. When Jackson was evacuated, in the early part of June, the regiment was conveyed by rail to Grand Junction, thence to LaGrange, from which place it marched to Moscow, on June 6th, and again entered upon the duty of guarding the line of the Mississippi Central Railroad. At this time Lieutenant Colonel Jed Lake was placed in command of the important post at LaGrange, which was a distributing point for army supplies. On July 19th, Colonel Gilbert was placed in command of the Third Brigade, Third Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, with his headquarters at LaGrange, and the command of the Twenty-seventh Iowa devolved upon Major Howard. On August 15th, Colonel James M. True, of the Sixty-second Illinois Infantry, returned from leave of absence and resumed command of the brigade, relieving Colonel Gilbert, who resumed command of his regiment.

On August 20th, the Twenty-seventh Iowa, with its brigade, marched to Memphis, and, on August 24th, the brigade was detached from its division and conveyed by transports to Helena, Ark., from which place it marched to Brownsville, where it joined the Army of Arkansas, commanded by Major General Steele. On September 10th, the brigade moved with General Steele's army against Little Rock, and assisted in the capture of that important post. As the brigade was held in reserve, and only the battery belonging to it becoming engaged, none of its regiments sustained any loss. The regiment was stationed at Little Rock until November 15th, performing camp and picket guard duty, when it was moved by rail to Devall's Bluff. Colonel True's regiment—the Sixty-second Illinois—remained at Little Rock, and Colonel Gilbert again assumed command of the brigade, leaving Lieutenant Colonel Lake in command of the regiment. Upon arriving at Devall's Bluff, the regiment with its brigade embarked on transports, moved down the White River to its mouth and thence up the Mississippi to Memphis, where it again went into camp just south of the city and remained there until January 28, 1864. Thus far the Twenty-seventh Iowa had had a most remarkable experience as compared with that of most of the other infantry regiments from its State. It had been in the service over fifteen months, had faithfully obeyed every order and performed all the duties to which it had been assigned, but, so far, had not come into direct conflict with the enemy; and yet its losses had been heavy,—aggregating more than twenty-five per cent of the number borne upon its rolls when it first took the field. Nine of its commissioned officers had resigned, while 64 of its enlisted men had died of disease, 193 had been honorably discharged on account of being disabled by sickness for further service, and 4 had deserted. At the close of the year 1863, the reports show that the regiment had 22 commissioned officers and 486 enlisted men present for duty; total 508. Some of the absentees were at home on furlough, but by far the larger number were sick in hospitals. A good many of these recovered and subsequently rejoined the regiment.

On January 28, 1864, Colonel Gilbert received orders to embark with his regiment. The transport which conveyed the Twenty-seventh Iowa was accompanied by a large fleet, all being heavily loaded with troops, with orders to report to General Sherman at Vicksburg. Upon its arrival at Vicksburg the Twenty-seventh Iowa was assigned to the Second Brigade, Third Division, Sixteenth Army Corps and, on February 3, 1864, took up the line of march towards the interior of the State of Mississippi, upon one of the most notable and successful expeditions of the war. A division of cavalry led the advance of General Sherman's army and had frequent engagements with the enemy's cavalry, which constituted about all the fighting that was done during the expedition, the rebel forces, under the command of General Polk, not being strong enough to make a stand and risk a general engagement. At Meridian, Miss., (the objective point of the expedition,) immense quantities of supplies for the rebel army were captured and destroyed, together with many locomotives and cars. Many miles of railroad track were also destroyed, and the damage thus inflicted upon the rebel army was very great. During the march the troops lived mainly off the country through which they passed, having started with but ten days' rations for the entire army. The army returned to Vicksburg on March 4th, having been gone over thirty days, and marched over three hundred miles. During the greater part of the time General Sherman was cut off from communication with General Grant and the War Department in Washington. It was a new and bold military experiment, and its complete success demonstrated the feasibility of that later splendid achievement of General Sherman—the march from Atlanta to the Sea.

In strong contrast with the success which had marked the Meridian Expedition, the Twenty-seventh Iowa was now about to enter upon another which, notwithstanding the valor and fortitude displayed by the regiment and the other troops with which it was associated, was destined to prove a failure, on account of the incompetency of the General in command. He was provided with a splendidly equipped army and had all the elements of success placed at his disposal, but, being totally lacking in the essential qualities of a great military leader and unwilling to act upon the advice and suggestions of his subordinate officers, several of whom were capable of assuming the chief command and successfully conducting the campaign, the operations of his army resulted in a series of discouraging defeats.

On March 10, 1864, the Twenty-seventh Iowa, with its brigade and division, embarked on transports at Vicksburg and were conveyed to the mouth of Red River and thence to Simsport, on the Atchafalaya River, where the troops disembarked. The Second Brigade was composed as follows: The Fourteenth, Twenty-seventh and Thirty-second Iowa Infantry and the Twenty-fourth Missouri Infantry, and was under the command of its senior officer, Colonel William T. Shaw, of the Fourteenth Iowa. At 6 A. M. on the morning of March 14, 1864, the brigade was ordered to take the advance in line of march towards Fort De Russy, twenty-eight miles distant. The march was conducted with great vigor and, late in the afternoon, the brigade arrived at the town of Marksville, two and one-half miles from the fort. At that point Colonel Shaw was ordered to leave one regiment of his brigade to act as rear guard for the army, and the Twenty-seventh Iowa was detailed for that duty. The regiment was thus prevented from participating in the attack upon the fort until just previous to its capture. After describing the fighting which had occurred prior to the time the general assault was ordered, Colonel Shaw says in his official report:

A general assault was now determined on, and I was ordered to advance my brigade, when I heard heavy firing on the left. Colonel Gilbert, commanding Twenty-seventh Iowa, had now arrived and, as my skirmishers of the Fourteenth Iowa had exhausted their ammunition, I ordered him to advance with his regiment to the ground occupied by them. The heavy firing at this time commenced on the left and the command forward was given, to all the regiments except the Twenty-fourth Missouri, to which I had already dispatched my Aide-de-camp, Lieutenant Berg, with the order, but just before his arrival the regiment was ordered forward and led in person by Brigadier General Mower, commanding division. The advance was, however, nearly simultaneous with the whole brigade, the different regiments arriving at nearly the same time at the works of the enemy. The Twenty-fourth Missouri, led by General Mower in person, has the honor of being the first of my brigade to plant their colors upon the walls of the fort, and, as far as my observation went, the first that were raised on the works of the enemy. At 6 P. M. the enemy had surrendered. My command had in twelve hours marched twenty-eight miles, been delayed two hours in building a bridge, fought two hours, stormed and assisted in capturing Fort De Russy—a good day's work.

Among the officers to whom Colonel Shaw tenders special thanks, for prompt obedience to his orders and efficient service in the action at Fort De Russy, are Colonel Gilbert and Captain Granger, of the Twenty-seventh Iowa, the latter being a member of his personal staff.² Owing to the fact that the regiment did not rejoin the brigade until just before the surrender of the fort, the only casualty sustained was one man very severely wounded, who died a few days later from the effects of the wound³

That part of the Red River campaign, in which the detachments from the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Army Corps—acting independently under the command of that able and energetic officer, Major General A. J. Smith—were engaged, had thus commenced with most favorable results. A strong fort with its entire garrison had been captured after a brief engagement, in which only two brigades of the Sixteenth Corps participated, with a total loss of thirty-eight in killed and wounded. Had General Smith then succeeded to the chief command of all the troops, there is every reason to believe that equally good results would have marked the subsequent progress of the campaign.

After dismantling Fort De Russey and effectually destroying it as a work of defense, the troops again embarked and moved to Alexandria, La., which place was quickly evacuated by the rebel forces upon the approach of the transports. General Smith had received orders to land his forces at Alexandria and there await the arrival of Major General Banks (the Commander-in-Chief of the expedition), with his troops. Upon the arrival of General Banks the combined forces moved forward, General Smith's troops taking the advance, and reaching Grand Ecore April 3d. On April 7th, General Banks' troops took the advance, on the road towards Shreveport, leaving General Smith and his troops in the rear of the transportation trains of the cavalry and of the Thirteenth and Nineteenth Corps. The roads were bad and the trains moved slowly. On the night of April 8th, General Smith's command went into camp about two miles from Pleasant Hill. During the afternoon of the 8th, heavy cannonading had been heard in front, indicating that the troops in advance had become engaged with the enemy. General Smith sent one of his staff officers forward, with the request that he be permitted to pass the trains, with a portion or all of his command, and join in the engagement, but he received no order to do so. He soon afterwards learned that the cavalry and the Thirteenth Army Corps had met a heavy force of the enemy, about eight miles beyond Pleasant Hill, and had been defeated, with a loss of nearly half of the corps and all their artillery and wagons, and that the enemy had only been checked by the coming of night and the Nineteenth Corps.

On the morning of April 9th, by permission of General Banks, General Smith moved forward with his command to Pleasant Hill, and formed in line of battle to meet the attack of the enemy. In the meantime, the remnant of that portion of General Banks' army which had been defeated and driven back by the enemy had been ordered to proceed with the trains to Grand Ecore, leaving on the field, to meet the attack of the exultant and victorious enemy, only a part of the Nineteenth and two divisions of the Sixteenth Corps. In the hard-fought battle which ensued, the Twenty-seventh Iowa bore a conspicuous part and improved the opportunity to place itself in the forefront of Iowa's gallant fighting regiments. It had marched and toiled and had endured great hardships, but up to this time had never participated in a great battle, and now was called upon to go into action against great odds, to meet the enemy flushed with victory, and, with its brigade and division, to retrieve the disaster of the previous day and save the army from an overwhelming defeat. In his official report of the conduct of his troops in the battle of Pleasant Hill, General Smith makes the following statement: "The opinion of Major General Banks, as to the action of the command and its results, may be gathered from his own words to me on the field, just after the final charge, when, riding up to me, he remarked, shaking me by the hand: 'God bless you, General; you have saved the army.'"⁴

The official report of the brigade commander, Colonel William T. Shaw, describes very fully the part taken by the brigade, and by each of the regiments of which it was composed, in the battle of Pleasant Hill. Limitation of space will permit only the quotation of such portions of the report as have reference to the Twenty-seventh Iowa and the positions occupied by the brigade during the battle, which are here given as follows:

... At 10 A. M., April 9, 1864, I was ordered to report with my brigade, consisting of the Fourteenth, Twenty-seventh and Thirty-second Iowa Infantry, and the Twenty-fourth Missouri Infantry, to Major General Banks. By him I was ordered to proceed with my command to the front, and report to Brigadier General Emory, which I did at about 10:30 A. M. General Emory ordered me to relieve Brigadier General McMillan, who was posted on the left of the Mansfield road and at right angles to it, in a dense thicket, with an old field in front, dotted over with small pines. About 100 yards to his front, and on his right, were four guns of the Twenty-fifth New York Battery. Brigadier General Dwight's command was posted on McMillan's right and diagonally to his rear. On the right of the New York battery was a ridge, which completely commanded McMillan's whole line and the town, and which also covered the approach of the enemy. I therefore deemed it proper to occupy this ridge with the Twenty-fourth Missouri Infantry, and relieve General McMillan with the balance of my brigade. This was accordingly done, and General McMillan retired. This left a gap on my left, and also threw my right beyond General Dwight's support, but, with this disadvantage, I considered the position better than the one occupied by the troops I had relieved. At this time General Smith came up, to whom I pointed out the position of my forces, which was approved, except that he ordered me to move my main line farther to the right, which brought three companies of the Fourteenth Iowa in and on the right of the Mansfield road; this, consequently, left a greater gap on my left. General Emory was aware of the changes by my brigade, but I cannot learn that he gave any orders for a corresponding change of Dwight's brigade. General Emory at this time left the front and I saw no more of him till after dark that night. These dispositions had brought Dwight's brigade in the rear of my second regiment, and nearly perpendicular to my line of battle. At this time my skirmishers were heavily engaged, and an attack appeared imminent. I deemed it prudent to consult with General Dwight, as General Emory had left that part of the field, and I could neither find him, or any of his staff. . . .

Continuing his report, Colonel Shaw states that he went along the line until he came to the place where General Dwight's brigade flag was located, but failed to find that General or any member of his staff. In the meantime, the skirmishers in front of Colonel Shaw's brigade were being driven back and he found it necessary to reinforce them. As yet the main line of the enemy had not advanced to the attack, although the skirmish line had been engaged for a considerable length of time. At 3 P. M. the enemy's skirmishers had passed to the right of Colonel Shaw's brigade, and the situation was becoming critical. At this juncture Colonel Shaw succeeded in finding General Dwight, who appeared to understand the danger of the exposed position and the necessity of holding it. He promised to send the necessary support; but, instead of doing so, withdrew his troops still farther to the rear. At about 4 P. M. General Stone—Chief of Staff to General Banks—rode to the front to examine the positions of the troops. Colonel Shaw rode with him along his brigade line, showing the changes that he had made since relieving General McMillan and the necessity for a corresponding change in General Dwight's line, which General Stone approved, saying to Colonel Shaw: "Your position is well chosen; it is admirable; it could not be better. I will see that your flanks are properly supported, for this position must be held at all hazards." The General then rode to the rear, presumably to give the necessary orders to General Dwight, but, if the order was given, it was not obeyed, as no support came and Colonel Shaw was left alone with his brigade to hold the most important position on the field. The enemy had been maneuvering all the afternoon behind his heavy lines of skirmishers and had succeeded in fully developing the positions of the Union forces and finding the best points against which to direct his attack. The desperate conflict which followed is thus described by Colonel Shaw, in the continuation of his report:

A few minutes before 5 o'clock the enemy opened heavily on me with artillery, which was replied to feebly, for a few minutes, by the Twenty-fifth New York Battery, when they limbered up and disgracefully left the field, leaving one caisson and one gun in the road, which were drawn off by Lieutenant Buell of my staff. At the same time General Dwight fell entirely out of my sight to the rear. While my battery was leaving, a dash was made by the enemy's cavalry to capture it, but they were so well received by the Fourteenth Iowa and Twenty-fourth Missouri that not a single man escaped, their leader, Colonel Buchel, falling dead in the ranks of the Fourteenth Iowa. This attack was followed by their infantry, which advanced in two lines, extending beyond both my right and left. They advanced steadily and in good order across the open field in my front, until they got within easy range; then my whole line opened upon them, stopping their advance but not preventing them from replying vigorously to my fire, causing heavy loss. My men held their ground, keeping up a steady and well-directed fire, which soon compelled their first line to fall back in disorder. In the meantime fighting had commenced on my left, and our line to my left had fallen back, so as to enable the enemy to pass in rear of my left. They had also passed around my right and were firing on my flank, when their second line advanced, and I was again engaged along my whole front. At this time I received an order from General Smith to fall back, as the enemy was getting in my rear. My staff officers having all been dispatched to different officers for support, and being myself on the right of my brigade, I had to ride to the left in rear of my brigade to give the order to withdraw. The brush and timber were so thick I could scarcely see ten paces as I passed down the line. I gave the order to Colonel Gilbert, Twenty-seventh Iowa, to fall back as soon as the regiment on his right should commence retreating. I then pushed on to give the necessary orders to Colonel Scott, Thirty-second Iowa, when I met the enemy's forces entirely in his rear, preventing me from communicating with him. I was therefore compelled to leave him to act without orders. Hurrying back to the right, I found the Twenty-fourth Missouri had been compelled to change its front to receive the attack from the right; also that the enemy was pressing my front with overwhelming numbers. . . . I therefore considered it necessary to give the orders to fall back to the three regiments with which I could communicate. . . . My men had fought well, holding their ground till ordered to retire, and, although my loss was three times that of any other brigade on the field, they were still in such condition that the commanding General saw fit to give them the responsible post of covering the retreat of the army, which commenced at 1 o'clock the next morning, and was accomplished in safety. . . . I cannot speak too highly of my regimental commanders. . . . Of Colonel Gilbert, Twenty-seventh Iowa, and his regiment, I can say they did their whole duty. Although they had never been under fire before, they gave their fire with the coolness and precision of veterans, and fully sustained the reputation of Iowa soldiers. Colonel Gilbert, although wounded early in the action, remained in command of his men until the fighting ceased. . . . The long list of killed and wounded, amounting to nearly 500, shows the desperate valor with which my men fought. . . .⁵

The official report of Colonel Gilbert, showing the part taken by and the conduct of his regiment in the battle of Pleasant Hill, embodies substantially the facts stated in the report of the brigade commander, from which the foregoing quotations were made. His description of the bold and reckless charge of rebel cavalry, early in the engagement, the terrible slaughter which ensued, when the gallant riders and their horses went down like grass before the scythe, and the tremendous fire under which the first line of the enemy's infantry melted away, coincides with that of Colonel Shaw, and its reproduction here would only involve repetition. Colonel Gilbert highly commends the conduct of his regiment and, at the close of his report, says: "I would like to mention the names of some of the officers and soldiers who distinguished themselves, but all conducted themselves so bravely and so well that I refrain from mentioning any save Captain J. M. Holbrook, Company F, who, after having received a severe wound, led his company with distinguished gallantry, until a second severe wound was received, and the regiment had reformed in the rear of the supporting column."⁶ The loss of the regiment in this engagement was 4 enlisted men killed, 65 wounded, 14 missing in action (either killed or taken prisoners) and 5 commissioned officers wounded; total 88. The loss of the four regiments composing the brigade was as follows: Fourteenth Iowa, 89; Twenty-seventh Iowa, 88; Thirty-second Iowa, 210; Twenty-fourth Missouri, 96; total 483.⁷ The greater loss of the Thirty-second Iowa is accounted for by the fact that it did not receive the order to fall back, and, becoming entirely isolated from the brigade, was compelled to fight its way through the enemy's lines. The Twenty-seventh Iowa had in this, its first, battle established a record for bravery and efficiency commensurate with that of the other splendid regiments of its brigade. Its subsequent history will show how well it maintained the honor it had won.⁸

Early on the morning of April 10, 1864, General Banks ordered a retreat to Grand Ecore, during which the Twenty-seventh Iowa with its brigade was placed in the position of rear guard. From Grand Ecore the retreat was continued to Natchitoches, and thence to Alexandria. The enemy had followed closely, and Colonel Shaw's brigade occupied the post of danger in the rear. From Alexandria the brigade was sent below the town and occupied a position near Governor Moore's plantation, where it had frequent skirmishes with the enemy. On May 13th Alexandria was evacuated, and the army began its retreat down Red River. On May 18th the Twenty-seventh Iowa, with its brigade, still acting as the rear guard of the army, again came into conflict with the enemy, at the battle of Old Oaks, La. In his official report of the part taken by his regiment in this battle, Colonel Gilbert, after describing the preliminary movements and positions of his regiment, says:

At 3:00 P. M. we were ordered to move by the left flank at a double quick about 500 yards, when we formed a line perpendicular to our former line, and at this point were subjected to a very heavy fire from the small arms of the enemy, but in about fifteen minutes succeeded in repulsing him. We then changed front again by moving by the right flank and filing right, and remained in this position nearly half an hour, when we were ordered to advance. We moved forward about 1,000 yards through a heavy piece of timber, driving the enemy before us, but, as we came out on the open ground, the enemy opened on us with grape and canister, forcing us to retire. We fell back to our former position in good order, considering the roughness of the ground and the thickness of the underbrush. We staid in this position about half an hour, when we were ordered to fall back by the flank nearly half a mile, where we lay until sunset. We were then ordered back to the position occupied by the regiment the night before, where we lay all night. The loss of the regiment was 3 killed and 14 wounded. Officers and men of my command behaved with the greatest coolness and bravery. Where all did so well it is useless to particularize.⁹

In his report of this engagement Colonel Shaw states that his brigade captured nearly three hundred prisoners, and that the loss to the enemy in killed and wounded was also heavy. He also states that while his brigade and two others—of General Smith's command—were fighting the enemy in the rear, the balance of the army lay quietly three miles distant, leaving these three brigades to fight the battle alone.¹⁰ On May 19th the brigade lay in line of battle all day, and until 2 A. M. of the 20th, when it again took up the line of march, and, on the 22d, reached the mouth of Red River, where it embarked on transports and was conveyed to Vicksburg, arriving there May 24, 1864. The operations of the Twenty-seventh Iowa and the troops with which it was associated on the Red River campaign will ever stand conspicuous in military history, for true devotion to duty and that noble spirit of sacrifice which was shown under circumstances of the most discouraging character. No troops displayed greater heroism, in the face of repeated disaster, during the War of the Rebellion.

The regiment remained at Vicksburg until June 5th, when it again embarked, with its brigade and division, and proceeded up the river to Greenville, Miss., at which point, and on the opposite side of the river at Point Chicot, Ark., the rebel General Marmaduke, with a force of infantry and artillery, was endeavoring to blockade the river, and had inflicted much damage by his attacks on the federal transports. Disembarking his troops on the Arkansas side of the river, on June 6th, General A. J. Smith marched rapidly against the main force of the enemy, under command of General Marmaduke, and, in the engagement which ensued at Ditch Bayou, the enemy was defeated and driven from the field with heavy loss. In this engagement Colonel Gilbert was in command of the brigade (Colonel Shaw being absent) and Major George W. Howard commanded the Twenty-seventh Iowa. In his official report Major Howard states that his regiment occupied a position on the left of the line but little exposed to the fire of the enemy, and sustained no casualties.¹¹ It held its place in the line of battle, however, and, as always, obeyed every order and acquitted itself with honor.

Having fully accomplished the purpose of the expedition, the troops marched to Columbia, Ark., and, going aboard transports there, were conveyed to Memphis, arriving there June 10th. The regiment remained in camp at Memphis until June 24th, when, with its brigade and division, it started on the expedition to Tupelo and Old Town Creek, Miss. During this expedition the brigade was commanded by Colonel Gilbert, and the regiment by Captain Amos M. Haslip, of Company A. On July 14th the enemy was encountered, and again on July 15th. The first engagement was at Tupelo, the second at Old Town Creek. Captain Haslip, in his official report of these engagements, describes the different positions occupied by the regiment, the alacrity and good order with which it moved against the enemy, and at the close of his report of the first day's contest says: "The men made the fight bravely and well." Of the engagement on the second day Captain Haslip says: "We had encamped for the night after a fatiguing march from Tupelo. The enemy approached on the Tupelo road. At 6 P. M. we were ordered out, and participated in the long charge through the woods, across Old Town Creek, and still on across an open field to the brow of the hill on which the enemy had planted their guns, and from which they had shelled our camp. My position was the left center of the Second Brigade, commanded by Colonel James I. Gilbert. Some of the men were overcome and exhausted by the extreme heat."¹² The loss of the regiment in these two engagements was one killed and twenty-five wounded. Among the wounded was Lieutenant William S. Sims, of Company B. Although the regiment had suffered heavy loss from disease and in battle, upon the date of the return to Memphis, from this expedition, its losses had been partially supplemented by recruits and by those who had recovered from wounds or sickness and returned to duty. Under date of July 23, 1864, Colonel Gilbert reports the aggregate strength 800—35 commissioned officers and 765 enlisted men.¹³

During the month of August, 1864, the regiment was most of the time on the march with the troops under command of General A. J. Smith, on the expedition to Oxford, Miss., returning to Memphis on the 30th. There is no record of casualties during the month. On September 5th the regiment left Memphis, was conveyed to Cairo, Ill., thence to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., thence by rail to Mineral Point, Mo., and returned to Jefferson Barracks on the 29th. On October 2d it marched with the army under General A. J. Smith in pursuit of the rebel army under General Sterling Price. This remarkable march extended to the Kansas line. There is no record of the regiment having come into contact with the enemy during this march, the strong cavalry force taking the advance and doing most of the fighting. At the close of the month the regiment had reached Pleasant Hill, Mo., on the return march, and from thence marched to St. Louis, where it arrived November 18th. On November 25th, the regiment, with the army under General Smith, embarked on transports and proceeded to Smithland, Ky., thence up the Cumberland River to Nashville, Tenn., where the troops landed on December 1st, marched three miles south of the city and went into camp. On December 15th the Twenty-seventh Iowa, with its brigade and division, advanced with the army under General Thomas to the attack of the rebel army under General Hood. The regiment was under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Jed Lake, and the official report of that officer describes in detail its movements during the battles of the 15th and 16th. At the beginning of the engagement on the 16th, Captain Hemenway, with his company (B), was ordered to take position on the skirmish line, the regiment following in line of battle on the left of the brigade. The subsequent movements of the regiment, during the engagement of the 15th, are thus described by Lieutenant Colonel Lake:

From 2 to 4 P. M. the cannonading was very severe on our right and left, but my regiment was shielded by the woods and hills so that the enemy's artillery was not directed at it. At about 4 P. M. Company B joined us, having been relieved as skirmishers. I received orders from Colonel Gilbert, commanding brigade, to wheel my regiment to the right and in rear of the right of the Fourth Corps. At the same time the charge commenced on the enemy's works. We followed close in the rear of the Fourth Corps till the works were carried, then moved by the right flank to the right, and encamped for the night. No casualties.

It will thus be seen that the Twenty-seventh Iowa was in its place in the line of battle, ready to engage the enemy, on the first day at Nashville, but was fortunately so placed that it suffered no loss. On the next day, however, it had a different experience, and, while it did not sustain a heavy loss, in proportion to the number engaged, acquitted itself with honor and fully sustained the excellent record it had made in previous engagements. Continuing his report, Lieutenant Colonel Lake says:

On the 16th inst. at daylight we formed in line of battle. My position was on the left center of the brigade. About sunrise, by orders from Colonel Gilbert, we made a half wheel to the right, and moved across an open field into the Granny White Pike, and thence across another field, under fire of the enemy's guns, in all about one mile. We were then moved by the right flank about half a mile into a ravine in a cornfield, where we were ordered to lie down. Here the fire of the artillery was very heavy, the missiles from the enemy's battery and our own passing directly over my regiment. One man of Company I was hit in the hip by a spent musket ball while in this position. About 4 P. M. I received orders from Colonel Gilbert to prepare for the charge. At the command, "Forward, double quick, march," every man went forward with a will. In passing between a house in our front and some outbuildings, both flanks were thrown back and crowded on the center, but on reaching the open field, about two hundred yards in front of the enemy's works, immediately deployed and went over the parapet in good style. The enemy were doing their best to escape, and we followed them through the woods and across an open field to the foot and up the side of the mountain, until men from the top hung out the white flag in token of surrender. Every man and officer behaved with the greatest gallantry, and it would be unjust to particularize.

¹³The history of the operations of the regiment, from its muster into the service to August 4, 1864, is contained in the report of the Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 1170 to 1182 inclusive, compiled by Colonel Gilbert. From August 4, 1864, to August 8, 1865, the history is continued on pages 289 to 294 in the report of the Adjutant General of Iowa for the year 1866, compiled by Lieutenant Colonel Jed Lake. From these histories, and other official data, this condensed historical sketch has been compiled.

The casualties were thirteen enlisted men wounded, two dangerously and most of them severely.

On December 17th the regiment marched in pursuit of the enemy. The pursuit was abandoned at Lawrenceburg, Tenn., on the 30th. On January 1, 1865, the regiment marched to Clifton, on the Tennessee River, and, embarking on steamer, proceeded to Eastport, Miss., where it arrived on the 5th, disembarked and went into camp. On February 9th the regiment again embarked on steamer, was conveyed to Cairo, Ill., and thence to New Orleans, where it landed on the 21st and went into camp near the city.

On March 7, 1865, the regiment embarked at New Orleans, on the ocean steamship, Empire City, and was conveyed to Dauphin Island, Ala., where it remained until the 20th, and was then conveyed to Donelly's Landing, Ala. On March 25th the regiment, with its brigade and division, again took up the line of march, and arrived at Sibley's Mills, near Mobile, Ala., on the 26th, and went into camp. On April 3d the troops advanced and joined the forces under General Steele, then engaged in the siege of Fort Blakely. The Twenty-seventh Iowa participated in the siege operations from the 4th to the 9th of April, on which latter date it took part in the charge which resulted in the capture of the fort, sustaining a loss of three men wounded. On the 10th, the Second Brigade, Second Division, Sixteenth Army Corps,¹⁴ occupied Fort Blakely. Major George W. Howard had the honor of commanding the Twenty-seventh Iowa during the siege and capture of the fort, and wrote the official report, in which he highly commended the conduct of the officers and men of his regiment.¹⁵ On April 13th the regiment marched towards Montgomery, Ala., where it arrived on the 27th and went into camp, remaining there and at another camp four miles from the city until July 15, 1865. On July 14th, 122 recruits—who had joined the Twenty-seventh Iowa—were transferred to the Twelfth Iowa. On the 15th the regiment received orders to proceed to Vicksburg, Miss., and there report to the commanding officer for muster out and discharge from the service. Transportation was provided by steamboat down the Alabama River to Selma, thence by rail to Demopolis, Meridian and Jackson, Miss., from which point the regiment marched to Black River Bridge and was conveyed thence by rail to Vicksburg and, embarking there on steamer "Commonwealth," was conveyed to Clinton, Iowa. On August 8, 1865, the regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States at Clinton, Iowa, was there disbanded and the officers and men returned to their homes. During its term of service the Twenty-seventh Iowa marched over 3,000 miles and traveled by steamboat and railroad over 10,000 miles. In the long line of splendid military organizations which the State of Iowa sent into the field during the great War of the Rebellion, none have a record of more faithful and honorable service than its Twenty-seventh Regiment of Infantry Volunteers.

Twenty-eighth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Infantry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

TWENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The Twenty-eighth Regiment of Iowa Infantry was organized under authority of the proclamation of President Lincoln, bearing date July 2, 1862. The ten companies of which it was composed were ordered into quarters by Governor Kirkwood, on dates ranging from July 24 to September 8, 1862. Camp Pope, near Iowa City, was designated as its place of rendezvous, and there, on October 10, 1862, the regiment was mustered into the service of the United States, by Captain H. B. Hendershott, of the Regular Army. At the completion of the muster rolls, the regiment had an aggregate strength of 956, including one additional enlistment.¹ But little time was given the officers and men to learn their duties as soldiers before they were ordered to take the field. They had only acquired the rudiments of military knowledge and were yet to gain, in the hard school of the soldier in time of war, that practical knowledge which would enable them to make for themselves and their regiment a record of which they could all feel justly proud. The regiment was composed of the same class of men that had already won honor and glory for the State of Iowa on the battlefields of the South; these men of the Twenty-eighth Iowa needed only the opportunity and the experience, (which had come to their comrades who had preceded them to the field,) and—as will be shown in this brief sketch—they were to have both in full measure. Their short stay in rendezvous was improved to the best advantage and, when the order to move south was received, the regiment was probably as well prepared for active service as any of those which had been mustered in at an earlier period of the war.

On November 2, 1862, the regiment was ordered to proceed to Davenport, at which place it was to await further orders. After considerable delay in procuring transportation, the regiment embarked on steamer, and was conveyed to Helena, Ark., where it arrived November 20th, and went into camp. A week later, a detachment of three hundred men of the regiment, under command of Major Lynch, joined the command of General Hovey upon an expedition, the main object of which was to divert the attention of the enemy from the movement of General Grant's army, then moving toward Vicksburg. The troops under General Hovey did not encounter any considerable force of the enemy, and the only casualty sustained by the detachment from the Twenty-eighth Iowa was one man killed, (Private William M. Hall, of Company C,)—the first man of the regiment who fell in defense of his country. The troops engaged upon this expedition returned to Helena on December 7th. The march had been rapid and toilsome and the men suffered greatly from the inclemency of the weather. In the meantime, that portion of the regiment which had re-maintained in camp had suffered almost equal hardship. The camp was located on low ground and the continuous rains had made it but little better than a swamp. The regiment soon after moved its encampment to higher ground, but sickness prevailed to an alarming extent. Many of the men died. Survivors of the regiment recall that winter in Helena and the regions adjacent (which comprised the territory covered by the operations of the troops) as the most gloomy and depressing period in all their experience as soldiers.

On January 11, 1863, the regiment embarked on steamer and proceeded, with other troops, under command of General Gorman, on an expedition up the White River, to Devall's Bluff. The weather conditions were the worst ever known in that part of the country. Soon after the fleet got under way a heavy rain began, which soon changed to snow and freezing temperature; the decks of the boats were covered with ice, and the troops suffered intensely from the cold. The boats were crowded and but few could procure shelter, most of the men being completely exposed, their clothing saturated, and many were nearly frozen. The result of this frightful exposure was death to many and permanent disability to many more. The expedition returned to Helena on January 23d. The results were meager, as compared with the amount of suffering and death involved. Some prisoners were captured, but no great amount of damage was inflicted upon the enemy. Rude log cabins were constructed for winter quarters, in which the men were somewhat more comfortable than they had been in tents, but the winter of 1863 was the most disastrous period in the history of the regiment, in the number of deaths from disease and discharges for disability resulting from the same cause.

On February 14th, a large force, under command of General Washburn, left Helena for the purpose of removing obstructions from the Yazoo Pass and securing a navigable channel through the tortuous windings of that stream. In this arduous labor the men and officers of the Twenty-eighth Iowa, who were able for duty, participated and, when the work was completed, returned to Helena. With the opening of spring the health of the men was somewhat improved, and they were cheered by the prospect of a speedy removal from winter quarters and the transfer from an environment that had been the scene of the struggle of so many of their comrades with sickness and death. On the 11th of April, 1863, the regiment, with its brigade,—consisting of the Forty-seventh Indiana, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Iowa, and the Fifty-sixth Ohio, designated as the Second Brigade of the Twelfth Division, Thirteenth Army Corps,—entered upon the Vicksburg campaign, which resulted in such important victories to the Union armies, under the command of General Grant. The first general engagement in which the Twenty-eighth Iowa participated, in that great campaign, was at Port Gibson, May 1, 1863. Colonel William E. Miller had resigned on March 13, 1863, and Lieutenant Colonel Connell had been promoted to Colonel of the regiment. His official report of the operations and conduct of his regiment, in its first conflict with the enemy, is here quoted in full:

Colonel:—I send the following as the report of the action taken by my command in the battle of Port Gibson, on May 1, 1863. On the evening of April 30, we were landed on the bank of the Mississippi, and started for Port Gibson. At 1 o'clock A. M., of May 1st, we could distinctly hear the boom of artillery in our advance. We quickened our pace, and arrived at the foot of Thompson's Hill at sunrise. General Hovey, commanding our division, rode up and said, "Boys, prepare your breakfast soon, for we go into battle in half an hour." After breakfast I formed in line of battle, and moved to the crest of Thompson's Hill, where we remained one hour under fire. Three companies,—B, G, and K,—were at this time sent to support the Thirty-fourth Indiana in a charge on a rebel battery, which was taken, with about 300 prisoners. After this I reformed the regiment, and was ordered to the extreme left

(by General McClernand), which was vigorously attacked by the enemy. Upon arriving at this point, I found that the enemy had massed a large force to turn our left, among which were two Missouri regiments, who were placed directly in our front. I formed my command so as to meet them, and, after a contest of nearly two hours, the enemy fell back, and we succeeded in planting the Eighth Michigan Battery on the knoll we held against the charge of the enemy, which battery played with telling effect on their lines. At about 4 P. M. they again appeared in force, still attempting to turn our left; but after a brisk engagement of about one hour they retired in confusion. A company of skirmishers, having been sent out to the left and front of our lines, discovered a rebel battery, which had command of the Port Gibson road. Our artillery soon got into position and commenced shelling it. My command lay in support until the battery had silenced the enemy's guns. By this time it was nearly dark, and General Stevenson, coming up, relieved us from the left, and we rejoined our brigade, which was encamped for the night on the field. Here we lay on our arms, in support of the Peoria battery during the night. With regard to the conduct of the officers and men during the action, I can only speak in terms of highest commendation. Although they had marched all day and night previous to the engagement, carrying three days' rations and one hundred rounds of cartridges to the man, and having never been under fire before, they fought with that fearless spirit and determination which has always characterized the American soldier.

JOHN CONNELL, Colonel
Commanding Twenty-eighth Iowa Infantry.

COLONEL JAMES R. SLACK, Commanding Second Brigade,
Twelfth Division, Thirteenth Army Corps.²

In the official report of the brigade commander, Colonel James R. Slack, of the Forty-seventh Indiana, the following reference is made to the two Iowa regiments which were detached from the brigade and rendered important service as reinforcements to the troops of General Logan's division at a critical period in the battle: "In the afternoon the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Iowa were ordered to the rear and extreme left of the line, to support Major General Logan's division, which was hotly engaged, and there continued fighting like veterans, as men of that gallant State always have done, until the enemy was driven from the field and utterly routed at every point, and the curtain of night closed the scene."³ Colonel Slack highly commends the conduct of the field and line officers of his brigade, and makes special mention of Lieutenant Theodore Schaeffer, of Company F, Twenty-eighth Iowa, who rendered most efficient service as Aide on the staff of the brigade commander. The report gives the number of casualties in the brigade as follows: Killed, 16; wounded, 62; missing, 11; total, 89. The casualties in the Twenty-eighth Iowa were: Killed, 3; wounded, 14; missing, 3; total, 20.⁴ It will thus be seen that, in its first battle, the Twenty-eighth Iowa had sustained about the average loss of the other regiments of its brigade, and had won for itself an honorable record. Its officers and men could now go forward with the feeling that they had established a reputation which they were in duty bound to sustain. They had passed the crucial period in their history, and could face the future with that confident feeling of self reliance which sustained them in all the conflicts in which they were subsequently engaged.

In the pursuit of and operations against the enemy, which followed, the Twenty-eighth Iowa performed its full share of duty and, on May 16th, participated in the hard-fought battle of Champion's Hill, in which it bore a most conspicuous part and suffered heavy loss. In the official report of the brigade commander, the preliminary movements of his command and the skirmishing which took place prior to the commencement of the battle are described in detail. The report occupies too much space to permit its being quoted in full; but a brief extract will suffice to show the desperate character of the fighting which ensued. After the skirmishing had been in progress for one hour and the position of the enemy had been developed, Colonel Slack was ordered to move his brigade forward to the attack. He thus describes the movement and that part of the engagement in which his brigade sustained its heaviest loss:

. I advanced the whole line, with the Forty-seventh Indiana on the right and the Twenty-eighth Iowa on the left. The thick growth of underbrush and vines and the ravines and hills made it very difficult to advance, but it was accomplished with little disorder, until we reached the crest of the hill, where we found the enemy in very heavy force, about 200 yards in front of us, and under cover of a wood beyond a field. Then the battle began with great fury, our troops advancing for the purpose of driving the enemy from the cover of the woods, which was done at double-quick and in a most gallant manner, the men loading and firing as they advanced, and unfalteringly receiving a most deadly fire from the enemy; yet they pressed forward as men only can do who are prompted by intelligent motives of patriotic devotion to a common country, until the rebel force was driven from the covering and forced to fall back a distance of 200 yards, with terrible loss, the ground being literally covered with dead and wounded rebels. In this daring and determined charge all the regiments lost most severely.⁵

There was much more fighting before the battle was ended, in which the Twenty-eighth Iowa bore its full part. At one time the enemy gained a temporary advantage. The Twenty-fourth Iowa had advanced beyond the other three regiments of the brigade and, by a gallant charge, had succeeded in capturing a rebel battery. The enemy, being reinforced, made a counter charge and recaptured the battery, when the Twenty-eighth Iowa, Forty-seventh Indiana and Fifty-sixth Ohio advanced to the support of the Twenty-fourth Iowa, and the reunited brigade charged upon the enemy. The rebel battery was again captured and, reinforcements coming up, the enemy, after making a most desperate resistance, was driven from the field with heavy loss. At the close of his report, Colonel Slack highly commends the conduct of the officers and men of each of the regiments of his brigade, and again makes special mention of the efficient service rendered by Lieutenant Theodore Schaeffer of the Twenty-eighth Iowa, who, as a member of his staff, rode along the lines under the fire of the enemy, carrying his orders to the regimental commanders. The casualties in the brigade were as follows: Killed, 108; wounded, 365; captured or missing, 93; total, 566. The total losses, by regiments, were as follows: Forty-seventh Indiana, 140; Twenty-fourth Iowa, 189; Twenty-eighth Iowa, 97; Fifty-sixth Ohio, 138; First Missouri Battery, 2; total, 566. General Alvin P. Hovey, the division commander, reports the number of his command engaged as follows: First Brigade, 2,371; Second Brigade, 1,809; total, 4,180. Of this number there were 211 killed, 872 wounded and 119 missing; a total loss in the division of 1,202,⁶—over 28 per cent of the number engaged. Two-hundred-twenty-one of the enemy's dead were buried on the field in front of the positions occupied by the troops of General Hovey's Division, and, upon the presumption that none of the enemy's dead were removed, the number killed on both sides was about the same. The number of rebel prisoners taken by General Hovey's Division was 700, while he reports but 119 captured or missing from his command. Sixteen guns of the rebel batteries were captured by the division. Of the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Iowa, General Hovey says: ". . . . Not more than six months in the service, their record will compare with the oldest and best tried regiments in the field. All honor is due to their gallant officers and men; and Colonels Byam and Connell have my thanks for the skill with which they handled their respective commands, and for the fortitude, endurance and bravery displayed by their gallant men. . . ." The General also makes special mention of the gallantry and devotion to duty of Surgeon Vest and Chaplain Simmons of the Twenty-eighth Iowa.⁷ Adjutant Joseph G. Strong, of the Twenty-eighth,—whose description of the part taken by his regiment in the battle of Champion's Hill is in accord with that portion of Colonel Slack's report from which quotation has been made,—says: ". . . . Four companies of the regiment came out of the fight without a commissioned officer. Lieutenant John J. Legan, of Company A, (Captain Shutts acting as Major,) was killed while gallantly leading his men; Captain Benjamin F. Kirby, of Company I, was also killed while doing his duty nobly; Lieutenant John Buchanan, of Company H, lost his arm; Captain John A. Staley, of Company F, was taken prisoner while crossing the field north of the Raymond Road, gallantly disputing the advance of the enemy. . . ." There is a slight discrepancy in the number of killed and wounded as given in the report of Adjutant Strong and the tabulated statement of the War of the Rebellion Record, the one giving the total as 100, the other as 97. As the keeper of the regimental records, the statement of the Adjutant—with the list of the names, numbering by actual count an even 100—must officially determine the matter. Such discrepancies are frequently found in officials reports, and are accounted for by the returns of losses being made up on the field immediately after the close of battles, and which are subsequently found not to include all the names which should have been reported. It will be seen from the foregoing reports that the Twenty-eighth Iowa fully sustained the splendid reputation of the soldiers of Iowa, in the hard-fought battle of Champion's Hill. In transmitting his report to Adjutant General Baker, Adjutant Strong says: "The Twenty-eighth has added new laurels to the noble young State of Iowa, and will continue to do so." How well and faithfully that promise was fulfilled will be shown in the subsequent history of the regiment.

Soon after the battle of Champion's Hill, the regiment, with its brigade and division, marched by way of Edwards' Station to Black River, where it remained for a few days guarding the bridge, and then marched to the rear of the enemy's outer works at Vicksburg, where, on May 25th, it was assigned to a position near the center of the left wing of the investing army. During the long siege which followed, the Twenty-eighth Iowa performed its full share of the arduous duties involved in the operations against the formidable works of the enemy, who made a most gallant defense of that almost impregnable stronghold. General A. P. Hovey, at the close of his official report of the operations of his division, says: "Officers and men displayed great firmness, coolness and bravery during this ever memorable siege, and I cannot discriminate among them." There were ten infantry regiments in the Twelfth Division, and General Hovey reports his loss during the siege: Killed, 19; wounded, 76; total, 95.⁹ Of this number the Twenty-eighth Iowa lost 3 killed and 7 wounded. The regiment also lost during the same period, by death from disease, 16, and by discharge for disability, 7; making its total casualties at the siege of Vicksburg, 33. The regiment had thus sustained its full average share of casualties at the hands of the enemy during the prolonged contest, and had shown itself the equal of any of the veteran organizations with which it was associated.

Also Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1864, pages 486 to 490 inclusive (in which the name of the Adjutant is erroneously printed James G. Strong), giving list of killed and wounded at Port Gibson and Champion's Hill. The names of all the killed and wounded in these as well as the other engagements in which the regiment participated, together with all casualties from whatever cause, will be found noted in the subjoined Roster. The compiler has made diligent search for the official report of Colonel John Connell, who commanded the Twenty-eighth Iowa at the battle of Champion's Hill, but has failed to find it, either in the Reports of the Adjutant General of Iowa or the Official Reports of the War of the Rebellion, published by the War Department.

On the 4th day of July, 1863, General Grant announced to his army the glad tidings of the surrender of Vicksburg. General Hovey received orders to report with his division to Major General Sherman, and, on the morning of July 5th, his troops were again upon the march, in pursuit of the rebel army, commanded by General Johnston. The Twenty-eighth Iowa performed its full share of duty during the short campaign which ensued, ending with the evacuation of Jackson, Miss., by the rebel army on July 16th. Its casualties were light, as shown by the report of the brigade commander.¹⁰ It suffered much hardship, however, both upon the march and in the trenches before Jackson, obeyed every order with alacrity and acquitted itself with honor, receiving the commendation of its division and brigade commanders.¹¹

The regiment returned to Vicksburg, at the conclusion of the Jackson campaign, and went into camp there on the evening of July 27th. A few days later it embarked on steamer and was conveyed to Natchez, Miss., where it remained but a short time, and, again embarking, was conveyed to Carrollton, near New Orleans. Going into camp, the regiment enjoyed a season of rest for nearly a month, during which time the health of the men was greatly improved. On September 13, 1863, the Twenty-eighth Iowa joined the troops under command of General Franklin, in an expedition which extended to the western part of the State of Louisiana. While no considerable force of the enemy was encountered on the expedition, there were several skirmishes, and the record shows that the regiment had six men captured. No detailed report of the operations of the regiment during this period is found, and it does not appear that any important results were accomplished, although a wide extent of territory was covered by the troops. The regiment returned to New Orleans and moved thence to Algiers, arriving at the latter place December 25, 1863, where it remained until about the middle of January, 1864, when it moved to Madisonville, near the northern shore of Lake Pontchartrain. While encamped at that place a considerable number of recruits joined the regiment, and its numbers were further increased by the return to duty of many who had recovered from wounds and sickness.

About the last of February the regiment moved to New Orleans, crossed the river and again went into camp at Algiers. A few days later it moved to ¹¹War of the Rebellion Official Records, Vol. 24, Series I, Part 2, pages 603 to 605, inclusive; Reports No. 29 and 30. In making this reference, the compiler has in mind the tremendous loss of another Iowa regiment, during the siege of Jackson, in obedience to an order from an officer high in command, and which should not have been given. The loss was followed by no more important results than were accomplished by the Twenty-eighth Iowa on the same day, without loss. Both regiments implicitly obeyed orders, the one protected and fighting behind breastworks, the other assaulting the strongest position on the line of the enemy's fortifications, without support, and suffering a loss, in killed and wounded, of nearly one-half its number engaged.

Brashier, crossed the bay and, going into camp, awaited the arrival of the troops with which it was to co-operate on the famous and—as the event proved—ill-fated Red River Campaign. On March 12, 1864, the Twenty-eighth Iowa and the other regiments of its brigade—the Twenty-fourth Iowa, Forty-seventh Indiana and Fifty-sixth Ohio, with which it had been so long associated—again took up the line of march. The regiment had at that time 550 men on duty, in good health and spirits and ready to meet the enemy with confidence in themselves and the officers who commanded them. The campaign began with bright prospects for complete success, and had the General who had been placed in command of all the Union forces possessed the same ability shown by several of his subordinate officers, or had he been guided by their advice and suggestions, success instead of failure would have resulted. The only notable engagement in which the Twenty-eighth Iowa participated in the Red River Campaign was at the battle of Sabine Cross Roads, in which it bore a most conspicuous part and sustained the greatest loss, in killed and wounded, of any regiment in its brigade or division. Colonel John Connell commanded the regiment and directed its movements until near the close of the engagement, when he was severely wounded and fell into the hands of the enemy. Captain Thomas Dillin then succeeded to the command of the regiment and, a few days later, submitted his official report of its conduct during the battle. He describes in detail the terrific fighting which took place and the gallant manner in which his regiment stemmed the unequal tide of battle and held its last position for two hours, only giving way when its ammunition was exhausted and there was no alternative but to retreat or surrender. A part of the concluding portion of Captain Dillin's excellent report is here given, as follows:

We went into the engagement 500 strong, and in the best of order . . . All most nobly did their duty. Not an officer flinched, not a man gave back. Colonel John Connell had his horse shot under him early in the action, but he remained on the field, cheering and urging his men to the last, and, it was supposed, fell mortally wounded, while retreating from the field. Loved most by those who knew him best, his loss to the regiment is irreparable. He possessed not only the respect but the affection of his men.¹² Adjutant J. G. Strong, while heroically and fearlessly doing his duty, was knocked from his horse by a minie-ball, inflicting a severe wound in the right shoulder, and was taken from the field. Having his wound dressed, he returned to the field and continued rallying the men in the thickest of the fire. First Lieutenant H. H. Weaver was wounded in the right cheek while leading his company and was compelled to leave the field. Second Lieutenant O. F. Dorrance, while cheering his men in action, was severely wounded in the right hip, and had to be borne from the field. I regret that space will not permit me to speak of all the officers standing up bravely and facing the rain of death, and of the non-commissioned officers and privates, many of whom fell in the conflict, yielding up their lives upon their country's altar. . . .¹²

The casualties in the battle of Sabine Cross Roads were: 8 killed, 41 wounded and 26 captured,—the greater number of the latter supposed to be wounded,—making a total loss of 75. The report of the brigade commander—Colonel W. H. Raynor of the Fifty-sixth Ohio—gives the numbers of the different regiments engaged and their casualties, as follows: Twenty-eighth Iowa, 419; Twenty-fourth Iowa, 188; Fifty-sixth Ohio, 243; total 840. Loss of Twenty-fourth Iowa and Fifty-sixth Ohio, 70; Twenty-eighth Iowa, 75; total loss of brigade, 145.¹⁴ It will thus be seen that the Twenty-eighth Iowa sustained a loss of more than that of the other two regiments, owing to the fact that it occupied a more advanced position and was compelled to fight its way out, after the enemy had gained its rear. In the official report of Colonel Raynor, (heretofore referred to,) the following reference is made to the heroic conduct of the commander of the regiment: "Colonel John Connell, of the Twenty-eighth Iowa, is among the missing, and is supposed to have been mortally wounded. Brave, even to a fault, he remained on the field too late and was seen to fall before the last heavy volley poured upon the devoted division. His loss will be severely felt, not only by his regiment, where it is irreparable, but by his brother officers and comrades in arms, to whom his many noble and generous qualities had endeared him." Colonel Raynor also mentions the gallant conduct of Thomas Hughes, of the Twenty-eighth Iowa, who was Acting Brigade Quartermaster, and was captured with Colonel Connell.

¹²Colonel Connell's wound although severe was not mortal. He was taken prisoner, but was subsequently exchanged and returned to his regiment.

¹³War of the Rebellion Official Records, Vol. 34, Series I, Part I, pages 287 to 289 inclusive.

The retreat continued during the night, and, on the morning of April 9th, instead of retaining every man of his available force to meet the victorious enemy, General Banks ordered his cavalry, and that portion of the infantry which had fought the enemy at such a disadvantage the day before, to proceed with the trains to Grand Ecore. Had he kept his army intact, instead of withdrawing a portion of it in the face of the enemy, there is every reason to believe that he could have won a decisive victory in the battle of Pleasant Hill, on the 9th of April, 1864. The officers and men who had met defeat the day before were ready and anxious to assist in retrieving the disaster, but were denied the privilege by the officer who had shown his unfitness to command an army. The Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Iowa were thus compelled to act as train guards on the march to Grand Ecore, while their comrades of the Fourteenth, Twenty-seventh, Thirty-second and Thirty-fifth Iowa, were bravely fighting at Pleasant Hill, and—as admitted by General Banks—saving the army from utter defeat at the hands of the enemy.¹⁵

The subsequent experience of the Twenty-eighth Iowa, in the closing scenes of the Red River Campaign, was marked by toilsome marches and great hardships. It halted for a time at Grand Ecore, where it assisted in the construction of fortifications which were soon abandoned, then marched with the army to Alexandria, and thence by way of Marksville to Morganza, where it arrived on May 22d. About this time the troops with which the regiment was operating passed from the command of General Banks to that of General Canby and, instead of continuing the retreat, assumed an aggressive attitude toward the enemy. In the movement which followed, the Twenty-eighth Iowa participated. The enemy declined to accept the gage of battle, and managed his retreat so successfully that the pursuit was finally abandoned. Returning to Morganza, the regiment embarked for Carrollton, arriving there about the middle of June. During most of the operations of the Twenty-eighth Iowa on the Red River Campaign, Lieutenant Colonel Wilson and Major Meyer had been absent on recruiting service in Iowa, and the former had rejoined the regiment at Grand Ecore, bringing with him a number of recruits. This compensated in some degree for the loss which had been sustained, and the regiment was ready and anxious to enter upon another campaign. Colonel Connell had been released from prison and rejoined his regiment at Carrollton, with an empty sleeve hanging by his side. As heretofore stated, he was supposed to have been mortally wounded at the time of his capture. He received a joyful welcome at the hands of the officers and men of his own regiment and from those of the brigade, in which he had many warm friends. The regiment, with other troops, soon moved again in pursuit of the rebel forces, but did not succeed in overtaking them, and returned to Algiers, where it went into camp and enjoyed a brief season of rest.

On July 22, 1864, the Twenty-eighth Iowa embarked on the Steamer "Arago" and was conveyed to Alexandria, Va., where it arrived and disembarked on the 2d of August. The voyage had been marked by great hardship on account of extremely hot weather and the crowded condition of the ship, and the men were glad to find themselves once more upon the land. The regiment was conveyed by ferry to Washington, and from thence marched to Tennallytown, where it went into camp and remained until the commencement of General Sheridan's campaign in the Shenandoah Valley. The first engagement of that campaign in which the Twenty-eighth Iowa participated was the battle of Winchester, September 19, 1864. Lieutenant Colonel B. W. Wilson was in command of the regiment during the battle and wrote the official report, which is here given in full:

HEADQUARTERS, TWENTY-EIGHTH IOWA INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS,
FOURTH BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, NINETEENTH ARMY CORPS,
NEAR HARRISONBURG, VA., Sept. 26, 1864.

COLONEL: In compliance with orders from Brigade Headquarters, I submit the following report of the part taken by my regiment in the engagement near Winchester, Va., on the 19th day of September, 1864. Early on the morning of the 19th inst., I broke camp near Berryville, Va., and advanced with the rest of the brigade on the Winchester Pike. After crossing the Opequan, we formed in line of battle, my regiment occupying the extreme left of the brigade. On receiving orders to advance, I immediately moved forward and was soon warmly engaging the enemy. The First Brigade of our division (being in advance) gave way, and were pressed back through our lines, yet we moved steadily forward for about fifty yards, under one of the most withering fires of shot, shell and canister, I have ever witnessed. Here I was ordered to halt. At this point the fighting was most terrific, yet I am happy to say none showed a disposition to either flinch from duty or fall back. We remained in this position until the right of the brigade, being pressed back, exposed my command to a severe flank fire, and I was forced to fall back a short distance to the cover of the timber, where we rallied and drove back the enemy, who were in the act of charging one of our batteries (the First Maine). We soon charged forward and took possession of our former position, where we remained until, our ammunition being expended, we were relieved by troops from General Crooks' command. We then obtained a fresh supply of ammunition and pressed forward to the front line again, where we remained until ordered to join the brigade in pursuit of the retreating foe. We followed them beyond Winchester. Here, night overtaking us, we lay down to rest and dream over the events of the day. Too much cannot be said in praise of both officers and men, who stood boldly forth in defense of the old flag, and did their duty so nobly. Not an officer flinched nor a man gave back, except by my order. I cannot forbear making special mention of the following officers for their gallantry on the field: Captain J. W. Carr, of Company C, was severely wounded, yet he continued to cheer the men under his command until borne from the field. Adjutant Joseph G. Strong was wounded in the early part of the engagement, had his wounds dressed on the field, and refused to leave the same, although advised to do so by surgeons, but continued to rally and cheer the men until victory was ours. He is a brave and fearless officer and worthy of promotion. First Lieutenant D. S. Dean of Company C was wounded, and told his own son not to leave the ranks to assist him, until the rebels were whipped, and he did not, until ordered to do so by me. Appended you will please find a list of killed, wounded and missing.

With high respect, I remain,

Your obedient servant,

B. W. WILSON, Lieutenant Colonel,
Commanding Twenty-eighth Iowa Infantry.

D. SHUNK, Colonel Eighth Indiana Veterans,
Commanding Fourth Brigade, Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps.¹⁸

¹⁸Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 1182, 3.

The casualties among commissioned officers of the regiment, not mentioned in the official report, were: Captain Palmer, killed; Captain Houseworth, mortally wounded; Captain Wilson, wounded, and Lieutenants Haverly, Summers and O'Hair, wounded; total 9 (including 3 mentioned in report). The casualties among enlisted men were as follows: Killed, 11; wounded, 55; missing, 25; total, 100.¹⁷ The Twenty-eighth Iowa had again gloriously maintained the honor of its State, while fighting by the side of the trained veterans of the eastern army.

The army under General Sheridan pressed forward after its victory at Winchester and, on the morning of September 22d, found the rebel forces strongly intrenched at Fisher's Hill. In the battle which ensued, the Twenty-eighth Iowa was not ordered into action until just before the enemy abandoned his position and began to retreat, when it was ordered to make a charge, in which it captured a six gun battery, a large quantity of ammunition and a number of prisoners. In this charge the regiment had five men wounded.¹⁸ In his official report, Lieutenant Colonel Wilson describes the different positions he was ordered to occupy, the gallant manner in which his regiment responded to the order to charge, and again commends his officers and men for their bravery and good conduct in action. The regiment did not again come into conflict with the enemy until the 19th of October, 1864, on which date it fought its last battle. The battle of Cedar Creek, Va., was one of the most notable of the great battles of the war. It is fitting, therefore, that the excellent report of Major Meyer should be here transcribed, showing, as it does, the splendid manner in which the officers and men of the regiment acquitted themselves on that historic field:

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-EIGHTH IOWA INFANTRY, FOURTH
BRIGADE, SECOND DIVISION, NINETEENTH ARMY CORPS,
CAMP RUSSELL, VA., Nov. 30, 1864.

GENERAL:—I have the honor to report that, in compliance with orders, the regiment at 5 A. M. was standing at arms, awaiting the issue of a reconnoissance to be made by the First, Second and Third Brigades of our division; but, before the reconnoissance was made, the enemy, in overwhelming numbers, attacked the Eighth Corps, which was on the left of the army. That corps, failing to be under arms, was soon driven from their works, and the enemy was rapidly advancing toward the Nineteenth Army Corps, occupying the center of the army, when General Grover, commanding the Second Division, ordered the regiment, with the Fourth Brigade, by the left flank, to change front and assist the Eighth Corps. The regiment was on the extreme left of the brigade and division, and, under the personal direction of the division commander, it was taken about one-fourth of a mile to the east of the Winchester Pike to hold the crest of a hill. In the hurry, the remaining regiments of the brigade were left west of the pike, and the Twelfth Maine was ordered to form on our right, but, after several unsuccessful efforts, it failed to come to the line and retired in confusion, which left our right exposed. A brigade from the First Division, Nineteenth Army Corps, formed on the line on our left; but the right of the line of the enemy extended far beyond the left of that brigade. It was soon outflanked and gave way. The Twenty-eighth was the last to fall back, but, being engaged on both flanks and front, there was no hope left of holding our ground.

At first we fell back slowly. It was, however, soon discovered that our retreat was being closed. I gave the order "double quick," and for one-third of a mile we passed through one of the most destructive fires ever witnessed, losing six men killed, and between thirty and forty wounded; a few of the regiment, rather than run that great hazard of life, laid down their arms and have gone to Libby Prison.¹⁹ Arriving at Major General Sheridan's headquarters, which were about half a mile northwest from the crest of the hill where we first engaged the enemy, with other regiments, we rallied and for a short time held the enemy in check. Here, while rallying and encouraging his men, Captain Riemenschneider of Company I was instantly killed, and Lieutenant Colonel Wilson was wounded and taken from the field. The Sixth Corps, which was on the right of the army, now engaged the victorious foe, but every effort failed, because the enemy continued to flank us on the left. The whole army was, therefore, ordered to fall back about two miles, so that our left was no longer exposed to the rebel right. The enemy, finding that they no longer had the advantage and seeing that our brave boys were not subdued, but ready to renew the conflict, ceased to advance. Then during a pause, such as is wont to prevail before a terrible storm, our army lines were formed, front to front with the enemy. The Twenty-eighth as well as the whole army had been repulsed. The enemy had our camps and all we had except our arms; they had possession of the battlefield, of our dead and our wounded; but we were unconquered.

Major General Sheridan comes upon the field. The Nineteenth Corps is placed on the right, the Sixth in the center, and the Eighth on the left. The Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Iowa form the connecting link between the Sixth and Nineteenth Corps. The awful scene opens. We notice nothing except our own commands and the enemy in front. No officers ever did better, nor any soldiers ever fought more bravely, than did those of my command in that hour, which turned our defeat into a glorious victory. We press forward, the enemy yields, he flees. The victory is won, the rout transcends all others of the war. It seems so cruel, yet so satisfactory to the loyal heart, to see our boys drop the running foe, and when he gets beyond the reach of the rifles of the infantry, to see the cavalry plunge with their carbines, revolvers and sabers right into the disorganized masses of the traitors, to kill, to terrify, and to scatter them in all directions. The Twenty-eighth goes into its old camp; our food and clothing are all gone. We had no breakfast, no dinner and nothing for supper; nor any rations nearer than Winchester, thirteen miles away. We go forward to guard a captured train two miles long. It is cold and dark. The mind grows calm; sadness and solemnity come over us all. The last struggles of our brave comrades, the heroic dead, are forever engraven on our memories. In after years we invite all interested in the Twenty-eighth, as they pass by on the hill, on the right of the pike, just before they cross Cedar Creek, to pause and read the names over the nine graves of the killed of the regiment on that day. They, with those mortally wounded, and the crippled and scarred for life, are some of the tokens of the unflinching fidelity of the regiment to an undivided nationality. I herewith append a list of the killed and wounded.

I have the honor to be,

Yours truly,

JOHN MEYER, Major
Commanding Regiment.

N. B. BAKER, Adjutant General, State of Iowa.²⁰

The casualties sustained by the regiment in the battle of Cedar Creek were as follows: Killed, 9; wounded, 77; missing, 9; total, 95. Among the officers wounded—who were not mentioned in the report—were Lieutenants Taggart and Barker. Lieutenant Colonel Wilson remained in command of the regiment until he was wounded and disabled, when the command devolved upon Major Meyer. In this last battle, as in all the others in which it had taken part, the Twenty-eighth Iowa had made an unbroken record of valor. From the time it entered upon the Shenandoah campaign, the regiment had lost two hundred men and officers in battle.

During the remainder of the campaign, the regiment participated in the operations of its brigade and division, but the records do not show that it met with any further casualties in conflict with the enemy. About the middle of November it went into winter quarters of its own construction, in which it remained until the latter part of December, when it moved to Stephen's Depot, near Harper's Ferry, where winter quarters were again constructed. About this time the regiment was assigned to the brigade to which the Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth Iowa were attached, the other two regiments of which the brigade was composed being the Thirteenth Connecticut and One Hundred Thirty-first New York. In his synopsis of the movements of the regiment, from Jan. 6 to July 31, 1865, Lieutenant Colonel Wilson describes the changes which occurred in its location and the various incidents connected with the closing months of its service.²¹ For the purpose of this historical sketch, the account of this period of the regiment's history is condensed from the report referred to, but includes all the incidents of special importance.

On the morning of January 6, 1865, the regiment went on board cars and was conveyed by rail to Baltimore and, from thence, by transports to Annapolis, where it embarked on the steamer "Illinois," for Savannah, Ga. The five regiments of the brigade were conveyed by the same steamer, and the voyage was rendered uncomfortable on account of insufficient quarters for so large a number of men. On January 19th the regiment disembarked at Savannah and was quartered for a few days in the railway station, while the men erected substantial quarters, which they occupied during the remainder of their stay at that place. On January 31st Colonel Wilson was ordered to detail two companies of his regiment to garrison Fort Barlow, on the river east of the city, and Companies A and D, under command of Captain H. M. Wilson, were assigned to that duty. Enoch Baird, of Company I, who had been captured by the enemy at Sabine Cross Roads and had escaped from the rebel prison at Tyler, Texas, rejoined the regiment at Savannah, after having endured almost incredible hardships. On February 6, 1865, Chaplain John T. Simmons, who had faithfully performed the duties of his office since the organization of the regiment, and who had gained the esteem and affection of all the officers and men, resigned and departed for his home in Iowa. On March 12th the regiment embarked on steamer, with orders to proceed to Morehead City, N. C.; passed Hilton Head on the 13th and, on the 15th, encountered a heavy gale. The vessel rolled badly and the men suffered much from sea-sickness. On March 18th the steamer reached its destination and the regiment disembarked and proceeded by rail to New Berne, N. C., where it rejoined the other regiments of the brigade which had preceded it to that place.

On April 13th the regiment returned to Morehead City and was put upon fatigue duty, handling and forwarding supplies to General Sherman's army. While engaged in this duty, the glad news of the surrender of the rebel General Lee and his army was received, followed later by the sad news of the assassination of President Lincoln. Finally, the news of the surrender of the rebel General Johnston and his army gave assurance that the war had ended. The officers and men now confidently expected to be soon released from the service, and were greatly disappointed when, on the 4th of May, they were again ordered to embark and proceed to Savannah, where they arrived on the 6th, and, on the 9th, started on the long and toilsome march to Augusta, Ga. On May 19th the regiment halted at the village of Hamburg, S. C., on the bank of the Savannah River, and from there detachments were sent to a number of places to gather up property which had belonged to the rebel government. The regiment remained in the performance of this duty until May 31st, when, with the Twenty-fourth Iowa, it moved to Augusta Arsenal, during the occupation of which place Colonel Wilson was the senior officer in command of all the troops, whose duty it was to guard the large amount of government property which had been collected there. It was the finest camp the regiment had ever had, but it was left without regret when the welcome order was received to return to Savannah, there to be mustered out of the service. The order was received on the 23d of June, and in seven days the regiment was again in Savannah. It was not until the 31st day of July, however, that the regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States. On August 2d, it embarked on steamer and was conveyed to Baltimore, where it arrived on the 5th, and was conveyed thence by rail to Davenport, Iowa, reaching that place on August 8, 1865. There the regiment was disbanded and, bidding each other an affectionate farewell, the men returned to their respective homes, there to again take up the duties of citizenship, with the same zeal and earnestness which had distinguished their conduct as soldiers. At the close of his report to Adjutant General Baker, Colonel Wilson says:²² "Better feeling never existed between officers and enlisted men than in the Twenty-eighth Iowa Infantry. Many eyes were moistened when separation took place."

It is no disparagement to any of the Iowa regiments which were engaged in the suppression of the Rebellion—every one of them having a splendid record of heroic service—to claim for the Twenty-eighth Infantry a place in the military history of the State surpassed by none. For bravery, fortitude and all the distinguishing features of honorable and faithful service, it stands forth conspicuously, and well may its survivors and their posterity, together with all the loyal sons and daughters of the Commonwealth, cherish the memory of its noble deeds and great achievements.

²²Lieutenant Colonel B. W. Wilson was commissioned Colonel of the Twenty-eighth Iowa, June 15, 1865; Major John Meyer was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel on the same date, and Captain John W. Carr was commissioned Major July 18, 1865. These promotions were all well deserved, but neither of these officers (as shown by the record) had been re-mustered at the time the regiment was mustered out, and they were therefore mustered out of the service with the rank they had previously held.

Twenty-ninth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Infantry

TWENTY-NINTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The ten companies which were to constitute the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Infantry had all been organized a considerable length of time prior to their assignment to the regiment. The records in the office of the Adjutant General of Iowa show that Thomas H. Benton, Jr. was commissioned Colonel, August 10, 1862, and that he was mustered into the service of the United States on the same date. The presumption is that he was authorized by the Governor to select from the companies then organized those which were to constitute the regiment of which he was to have command. The place of rendezvous was Council Bluffs, and the camp was given the name of "Dodge," as a compliment to General G. M. Dodge, whose home was in that city, and who had entered the service as Colonel of the Fourth Iowa Infantry. The records show that the first company (which afterwards became Company D of the Twenty-ninth) was ordered into quarters by Governor Kirkwood, August 15, 1862, and that the dates upon which the other companies received orders to go into quarters ranged from September 1 to November 13, 1862. The organization of the regiment was completed and the ten companies were mustered into the service of the United States on December 1, 1862, by Lieutenant Horace Brown, of the Regular Army. The aggregate strength of the ten companies and the field and staff, at muster in, was 964. There were early additional enlistments, however, of 41 men, thus bringing the total number to 1,005, at the time the regiment left the State.¹ Those officers of the field and staff who had served in other Iowa regiments were Lieutenant Colonel R. F. Patterson, formerly Adjutant of the Fifth Iowa Infantry; Adjutant Joseph Lyman, Corporal Company E, Fourth Iowa Cavalry; Surgeon W. S. Grimes, formerly Assistant Surgeon, Fourth Iowa Infantry, and Assistant Surgeon W. L. Nicholson, formerly of the Thirty-second Iowa Infantry.

It was understood that the regiment would be ordered to join the army under command of General W. T. Sherman, and participate in the movement against Vicksburg, in December, 1862. That was rendered impossible, however, by the closing of navigation of the Missouri River about the time the regiment was mustered into the service. Between the 5th and 9th of December the regiment marched to St. Joseph, Mo., and, upon its arrival there, Colonel Benton reported by telegraph to Major General S. R. Curtis, Commander of the Department of the Missouri, at St. Louis, for orders. A few days later orders were received for the regiment to proceed to St. Louis by rail; on December 20th it arrived in that city and, for the next few days, was engaged in the duty of guarding prisoners. On December 25th the regiment was ordered to embark on transport and proceed to Columbus, Ky., which place was at that time threatened with attack. Upon arriving at Columbus it was assigned to the command of Brigadier General Tuttle, (formerly Colonel of the Second Iowa Infantry,) and, taking position with the other troops composing the garrison, awaited the attack. Learning that reinforcements had arrived, the commander of the rebel forces wisely concluded that it was best to defer attacking the place. On January 8, 1863, the regiment was relieved from duty at Columbus and ordered to again embark and proceed to Helena, Ark.² Upon its arrival at Helena the regiment did not disembark, but was ordered to proceed at once—in conjunction with other troops, under the command of General Gorman—on an expedition up the White River. In the historical sketch of the Twenty-eighth Iowa Infantry the compiler has described the frightful exposure to which the troops engaged upon this expedition were subjected, and the meager results accomplished. The Twenty-ninth Iowa endured the same hardships and suffered the same disastrous consequences of sickness and death, which was the inevitable result of such an experience. Upon its return to Helena, the regiment had over four hundred men on the sick list. An examination of the list of casualties shows that of this number many died and many were discharged on account of having become disabled for further service.³ As the direct consequence of the sickness resulting from exposure on the White River expedition, Adjutant Lyman places the loss of the regiment at not less than two hundred men. It was the most gloomy and disheartening period in the history of the Twenty-ninth Iowa. Its officers and men had anticipated, and were prepared to endure, suffering and privation, and, where commensurate results were achieved, were not disposed to complain. They had, however, seen the lives of many of their comrades sacrificed upon an ill-directed expedition, which resulted in but little advantage to the cause for which they had enlisted, and it was but natural that a feeling of despondency should prevail under such conditions. The regiment had been on board the crowded transport for eighteen days, when it landed at Helena and disembarked, on the 26th of January, 1863.

During the months of March and April, 1863, the Twenty-ninth Iowa was actively engaged in that memorable expedition through the tortuous windings of the Yazoo Pass, and the Cold Water and Tallahatchie Rivers, to Fort Pemberton. It embarked at Helena on the steamer "Emma No. 2," but, on reaching the Cold Water River, the vessel was found to be so badly injured as to render it necessary to abandon her, and the regiment was transferred to the "Key West," on which vessel it made the voyage to the fort and back to Helena. From the date of its return, until near the middle of August, the camp and headquarters of the regiment remained at Helena, and it performed the ordinary duties of the camp and garrison, except when participating in short expeditions to observe the movements of the rebel forces, which were operating in that vicinity.

The Twenty-ninth Iowa had its first experience in actual conflict with the enemy at the battle of Helena, on July 4, 1863. It was one of the regiments composing the brigade commanded by Colonel Samuel A. Rice, of the Thirty-third Iowa, and constituted as follows: The Twenty-ninth, Thirty-third and Thirty-sixth Iowa Infantry, the Third Iowa Battery and the Thirty-third Missouri Infantry. The town of Helena was strongly fortified. Its defenses consisted of a line of four forts, erected upon a high ridge just west of the town. Inside this line of works, and nearer the town, stood the formidable redoubt of Fort Curtis. The position was naturally a strong one, as the ridges occupied by the forts were high and broken by deep ravines. The roads leading into the town over these ridges were blockaded with fallen trees, for the purpose of retarding the approach of the enemy. The gunboat "Tyler," stationed in the channel of the river in front of the town, was also an important factor in its defense. The only element of weakness consisted in the insufficient strength of the troops. The garrison numbered but little more than 4,000 effective men, while the rebel force which assaulted the works numbered nearly 10,000, under the chief command of Lieutenant General Holmes, aided by some of the ablest subordinate commanders of the rebel army. Major General B. M. Prentiss, one of the heroic division commanders at Shiloh, was in command of the post of Helena, and Brigadier General Salomon commanded the division of troops that defended the works. Colonel Benton was in command of the Twenty-ninth Iowa. His official report of the conduct of his regiment in the battle of Helena is here quoted, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-NINTH IOWA INFANTRY,
HELENA, ARK., July 6, 1863.

COLONEL: I have the honor to make the following report of the part taken in the engagement of the 4th instant by my regiment. My men were drawn up in line of battle at daylight, and, at half past four o'clock A. M., in pursuance of orders from Col. Samuel A. Rice, commanding Second Brigade, we marched across the bottom at double quick, to a position on the Sterling Road. Upon reaching the point designated, I found that the enemy occupied the crest of the hills with their skirmishers, north of Battery A, commanding my position. I immediately sent forward two companies of skirmishers to dislodge and drive them back, but, finding them too strongly posted, I continued to reinforce the line until eight companies were deployed. In the meantime, the enemy had placed a battery of two guns in position, with which they opened a brisk fire and moved rapidly upon us, cheering and exulting as they advanced, being partially shielded from view by a fog which covered the hills at that moment. Our skirmishers met them with a galling and incessant fire, under which they gradually fell back, resolutely contesting every inch of ground as they retired. Our skirmishers advanced steadily and cautiously, and, having gained the crest of the hill previously occupied by the enemy, compelled him to abandon his guns, which, after several ineffectual attempts, he subsequently recovered, and withdrew, leaving one caisson on the field. My men were under a severe fire for more than five hours, and it affords me the greatest pleasure to speak of both officers and men in terms of the highest commendation for their coolness and bravery during the entire action. I saw no flinching or wavering during the day. It is proper to add that several of my officers, and quite a number of my men, who were excused from duty in consequence of physical disability, left their quarters and joined their respective companies when the signal gun was fired. Any invidious distinctions among members of my command would not be admissible in this report, but I would not do justice to an accomplished officer, should I fail to acknowledge the efficient services of Lieutenant Colonel R. F. Patterson, during the action, and the special obligations I am under for the thorough instructions previously given by him, to both officers and men, in the responsible duties and obligations of the soldier, the importance of which instruction was so forcibly illustrated on the 4th instant. My regiment was promptly supported by the Thirty-sixth Iowa Infantry, commanded by Colonel Kittredge, and was relieved by him a short time before the enemy left the field. The enemy's force in front of our line, from the most reliable information within my reach, was one brigade of five regiments of infantry, and one battery, and two regiments of cavalry in reserve, under command of Colonel McCrea. I regret to have to report that during the engagement the loss in my regiment was 7 killed and 24 wounded, some of them mortally—two of whom have died since—and many of them severely. Among the number are some of my best and bravest men.⁴ The enemy's loss it is not possible to state definitely, as he succeeded in removing many of them from the field. We buried 14 of his dead, found the graves of 17 more buried by himself, and brought one of his wounded from the field.

I have the honor to be, Colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS H. BENTON, JR.,

Colonel Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry.

To SAMUEL A. RICE, *Colonel Commanding Second Brigade,
Thirteenth Division, Thirteenth Army Corps.*⁵

The report of the Brigade Commander, Colonel S. A. Rice, describes in detail the positions occupied by and the movements of each of the regiments, and the battery, belonging to his brigade. He refers to the conduct of the Twenty-ninth Iowa, in conjunction with others, as follows:

The officers and soldiers of the Twenty-ninth Iowa acted with the utmost coolness and bravery, and steadily gained ground from the first onset. The Thirty-sixth Iowa behaved in a manner worthy of all commendation. They were promptly moved to the relief of the Twenty-ninth Iowa, and drove, by their well directed fire, the enemy before them, occupying the crests of the hills. The enemy could repeatedly be heard trying to rally their columns for the purpose of charging on our line, and were only prevented by the continuous fire of our line, assisted by a heavy and well directed cross fire from our artillery and the rifle pits. . . . If some bore more conspicuous parts than others, it was because the position of their own commands placed them in a more important position. I take especial pleasure in referring to Colonel Benton, of the Twenty-ninth Iowa, Colonel Kittredge, of the Thirty-sixth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Heath, commanding Thirty-third Missouri, Lieutenant Colonel Mackey, commanding Thirty-third Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Patterson, Twenty-ninth Iowa, Majors Gibson, Van Beck and Shoemaker, who, for their coolness, efficiency and daring, are worthy of especial mention. They were at all times at the post of danger cheering their men. Lieutenant Lacey, my Acting Assistant Adjutant General, acted as my Aide during the engagement, and rode to whatever part of the field required his presence, and afforded me assistance of the most valuable character, and I take especial pleasure in referring to him.⁶

Colonel Rice reports the loss of his brigade as follows: Killed, 45; wounded, 96; missing, 30. There were none missing in the Twenty-ninth Iowa, and its loss in killed and wounded averaged about the same as that of the other three regiments of the brigade. It will thus be seen that the regiment bore a most honorable part in the battle of Helena, and contributed its full share of the gallant fighting which saved that important post from falling into the hands of the enemy. The enemy had greatly the advantage in numbers, and made a most stubborn and desperate fight for the possession of the place, but the relatively small force of its brave defenders had the advantage of fighting behind strong defensive works, from which they were able to inflict very heavy loss upon the enemy, and finally compel him to abandon his attempt to capture the post.

The regiment remained at Helena until the 11th of August, 1863, on which date it took up the line of march, with the army commanded by General Steele, towards Little Rock. The weather was excessively hot and dry. The army halted one week at Clarendon, at which point the White River was crossed. Thence the march was continued up the river to Devall's Bluff, at the crossing of the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad, where a hospital and depot of supplies was established. At this time the Twenty-ninth Iowa was attached to a division commanded by General Samuel A. Rice;⁷ the brigade being under command of Colonel Benton. The march was continued towards Brownsville, across Grand Prairie, the men suffering greatly from the heat and lack of water. Many were prostrated with sun-stroke and there was not a sufficiency of room in the ambulances for one-half the number who were unable to march. Under such conditions, it became a necessity to fill the ambulances to their capacity, send them ahead of the marching column as far as it was deemed safe to go, leave them by the road-side and return for others. Thus, for the greater part of two days prior to reaching Brownsville, the sick were subjected to most intense suffering, in addition to the ailments with which they had been stricken. During the halt of a few days at Brownsville, General Rice's division made a rapid march to Bayou Metoe, to cover the movement of General Davidson's Cavalry, and to ascertain the exact location of the main body of the enemy. It was discovered that the rebel army, under command of General Price, occupied a strong position four miles from the city of Little Rock, his right being protected by the Arkansas River, and his left by an impassable cypress swamp. General Steele determined to flank the position of the rebel army, and succeeded in doing so by marching his command to a point eight miles below Little Rock, where a pontoon bridge was thrown across the river, upon which the cavalry division crossed to the south side on the morning of September 10th, and moved rapidly towards the enemy. In the meantime the infantry continued its march up the north bank of the river, momentarily expecting to encounter the enemy. General Rice's division met with no resistance. The artillery was brought into play from the north side of the river and assisted the left wing in its attack upon the enemy. The rebel army soon began to retreat, but continued to resist the advance of the cavalry with considerable obstinacy. The retreat was accelerated by the steady advance of the infantry on the north side, and at dark the cavalry division had entered the city and captured the arsenal, with a large amount of public property, which had been left unharmed by the rebels in their hasty retreat. The Twenty-ninth Iowa had borne its full share of hardships upon the march and in all the movements which led up to the capture of Little Rock, but had fortunately escaped without loss either in battle or on the skirmish line. The army went into camp around the city. The Twenty-ninth Iowa was engaged in the ordinary routine of camp life during the remainder of the summer. In November, 1863, the regiment took part in an expedition commanded by General Rice, the object of which was the interception of a force of rebels under General Marmaduke, then retreating from Pine Bluff, where he had been repulsed with heavy loss. General Rice's command marched rapidly as far as Rockport, on the Washita River, but did not succeed in overtaking the rebel force. This ended the active campaigning of the regiment for the year 1863.

The Twenty-ninth Iowa remained at Little Rock during the winter of 1863-4, and until the army under General Steele moved to the southwest, on the morning of March 23, 1864. The object of this expedition was to co-operate with the army under General Banks, in his Red River campaign. The most important events in which the Twenty-ninth Iowa participated during this expedition are described in the official report of Colonel Benton, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-NINTH IOWA INFANTRY,
LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 7, 1864.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to report that on the morning of the 2d of April, 1864, I was assigned to the position of rear guard to our supply train, with one section of Captain Veogler's Battery. I disposed my force in the following order: one company immediately in the rear of the train, as an advance guard; then Captain Veogler's ⁷Colonel Samuel A. Rice of the Thirty-third Iowa Infantry was promoted to Brigadier General, August 4, 1863.

Battery, followed by the main body of my command, and two companies as a rear guard, with a Sergeant and eight men one hundred paces in their rear. While the train was passing through a narrow, muddy defile, made by a small stream, about one mile beyond Terre Noir Bayou, a battalion of Shelby's Cavalry made a sudden dash upon my rear, but was held in check by my rear guard and the left wing of my regiment. So soon as my advance had crossed the ravine and formed in line, I ordered the battery into position and opened fire upon the enemy, which was responded to by two pieces of artillery with spirit and accuracy. The enemy soon fell back and made demonstrations of a flank movement to my left. I immediately withdrew my forces to Terre Noir Bayou, when they again renewed the attack. I again opened fire with the battery and a few rounds of musketry, which sufficiently discomfited the enemy to enable me to fall back, under cover of the fire of our skirmishers, to the top of a hill two miles distant. At this point I deployed my forces on either side of the road, and secured a good position for the battery, when the enemy again came up in force, and made a desperate charge upon our left wing, but was promptly repulsed, upon which he fell back, crossed the road, and attacked our right with no better success. The engagement at this point lasted about one hour and a half, pending which Brigadier General S. A. Rice, with the Fiftieth Indiana, whose conduct on the occasion was highly commendable, arrived and assumed command. My command was ordered into line twice afterward, but was not engaged. My loss during the day was 27 killed, wounded and missing, including among the wounded three commissioned officers.

During the engagement at Elkin's Ford, on the Little Missouri, on the 4th of April, my command was ordered forward by General Rice across the Bayou, and drawn up in line of battle in the rear of four companies of the Thirty-sixth Iowa Infantry, under command of Lieutenant Colonel F. M. Drake. My left wing was subsequently ordered back across the Bayou, under Major Shoemaker, and drawn up in line in the rear of the remaining six companies of the Thirty-sixth Iowa, under Colonel C. W. Kittredge, and my right wing under my immediate command was ordered to fall back to the bank of the Bayou, in the rear of Colonel Drake's command. No part of my command was engaged with the enemy, and my only casualty was one man wounded. On the afternoon of the 10th of April, 1864, when we engaged the enemy at Prairie d'Ane, my regiment was ordered into position in double column, immediately in the rear of the Thirty-third Iowa Infantry as a reserve. We advanced in this order, with the enemy retreating before us, until nightfall, when we formed line of battle, and bivouacked till morning. On the afternoon of the 11th we were ordered to reform in double column, and advance a mile, as a reserve to the Thirty-third Iowa Infantry and Fiftieth Indiana Infantry. At eight o'clock P. M., we were ordered back to the position occupied the night previous, where we again formed in line of battle and bivouacked for the night. At six o'clock on the morning of the 12th, Rice's brigade was drawn up in close column by division, on the fourth division of the respective battalions left in front, and my command assigned the advance. After marching in this order over a mile, my regiment was deployed in line of battle, forming the extreme left of the brigade. In this order we advanced upon the enemy a mile, during which time I had two men severely wounded, being the only casualties subsequent to the action at Elkin's Ford. I was then ordered to resume my position in double column, and subsequently by the right flank, as a reserve to the Thirty-third Iowa Infantry, and maintained this order until we passed the enemy's fortifications on the Washington and Camden Road, when we were ordered to resume the line of march to Camden. On the 15th I was ordered to furnish one company for the advance line of skirmishers, and to take my position immediately in the rear of Captain Stranger's battery. When the enemy opened fire upon us at Liberty, I drew up my command in line of battle on the left of the battery, and threw forward a company of sharpshooters to disable, if possible, the enemy's gunners and horses. During the engagement at this point, I had one man killed and three wounded. After the enemy retreated, we resumed the regular line of march, and met with no further casualties during the day.

On the morning of the 30th of April, 1864, at 6 o'clock, I was ordered to proceed across the third field beyond the Saline River, on the road from Princeton to Jenkins' Ferry, and form a line of battle in the timber. After occupying this position a few minutes, in obedience to further orders, I fell back, and drew my command up in line of battle in the timber, forty paces this side of the field, on the ground occupied the night previous as the headquarters of General Salomon, my right resting on the road, and my line constituting the extreme right of our main line of battle. I threw forward my two flank companies as skirmishers, near the edge of the field, and one company between the road and the bayou on the right. Soon after Colonel Engleman's brigade passed to our rear, the advance skirmishers of the enemy, mounted and partly dressed in our uniform, made their appearance, driving a flock of sheep before them. My first impression was that it was a small detail of our cavalry, driving in the sheep for our own use, but a shot or two from their advance soon identified them, and they were instantly engaged by our skirmishers. The main body of their forces advanced steadily until within full view, when our skirmishers withdrew, and the engagement became general. After a spirited action of an hour, the fire of the enemy slackened, and a portion of his forces moved to the right across the bayou, and opened a brisk fire from the timber and underbrush, which concealed them from view. I immediately threw one company across the bayou, and several small detachments from other commands soon joined. This foiled the enemy in his attempt to flank us on the right, when he again concentrated his forces in front, and renewed the attack with increased vigor, but utterly failed to derange any part of our line. My command was relieved by the Ninth Wisconsin Infantry, when I fell back to rest my men and get a supply of ammunition. The Ninth Wisconsin was subsequently relieved by the Second Kansas Colored Infantry, who moved up in good order and held the line gallantly for half an hour. At this moment the enemy moved a section of artillery down the road, and got it into position within one hundred paces of our right and opened a galling fire of grape and canister upon us. I was ordered by General Rice to advance and charge the battery. My men moved forward promptly with a shout, and when we reached the line occupied by the Second Kansas, the two regiments were blended into one, and rushed forward like an impetuous torrent, and in two minutes passed the battery, driving the enemy in confusion before us. The Second Kansas now withdrew and took the guns to the rear. My own command moved forward about sixty paces beyond, but my supply of ammunition being nearly exhausted, and my command in advance of the regular line of battle, I fell back slowly to my original position, and was again relieved by the Ninth Wisconsin. With the exception of an occasional shot, the firing now ceased for about half an hour on the extreme right, when the enemy again rallied and charged our right flank with renewed energy. I immediately threw my command forward on the right of the Ninth Wisconsin, and engaged him a third time. After a brief but severe contest, in which our loss was unusually heavy, he again retired and left us in undisputed possession of the ground in the immediate vicinity of the road.

At this juncture, Lieutenant Cock of General Salomon's staff, notified me that General Rice was wounded and that Colonel Salomon, of the Ninth Wisconsin, had been assigned to the command of the brigade. After resting my men and replenishing my supply of ammunition, I was ordered by Colonel Salomon to move by the left flank, and support our forces in the center, which at this time were severely pressed by the last desperate charge of the enemy. His fire, however, soon began to slacken, and in half an hour entirely ceased, when he withdrew from the field. Our forces were then gradually withdrawn and ordered to resume the line of march toward the ferry. My loss in this engagement was ninety-one killed, wounded and missing, including among the wounded three commissioned officers. In addition to the above my Assistant Surgeon, W. L. Nicholson, and sixteen men were left with the wounded beyond the river and fell into the hands of the enemy, making our aggregate loss in killed, wounded and missing, 108. I am under special obligations to Major Shoemaker and Adjutant Lyman of my command (Lieutenant Colonel Patterson being absent on sick leave) for their prompt and efficient co-operation in the several actions named in this report. Their vigilance and gallantry at the battle of Jenkins' Ferry, stimulating officers and men by their presence and example in the most exposed positions, was highly meritorious. My line officers performed their respective duties with unflinching fidelity, encouraging their men and keeping them in line in the thickest of the fight and under the heaviest fire of the enemy. The fortitude and endurance of the men, with a very limited number of dishonorable exceptions, was unsurpassed in the history of civilized warfare.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS H. BENTON, JR., Colonel

Commanding Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry.

JOSEPH LYMAN, Adjutant

Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry.

To JOHN F. LACEY, Acting Assistant Adjutant General,
*First Brigade, Third Division, Seventh Army Corps.

An analysis of the list of casualties sustained by the Twenty-ninth Iowa at the battle of Jenkins' Ferry shows that 15 were killed, 50 wounded who did not fall into the hands of the enemy, and of the 43 reported as missing, 29 were known to be wounded, thus leaving but 14 of the missing who were not reported as having been wounded, and showing that, of the aggregate loss of 108,—as shown in the official report of Colonel Benton,—94 were killed and wounded on the field. Thus far in its history, the casualties of the regiment, resulting from conflict with the enemy in battle, aggregated 173, a less number, however, than it had lost in its first campaign from sickness alone. As will be seen from its previous and subsequent history, the battle of Jenkins' Ferry was by far the most severe of any in which it became engaged.

Early in May the regiment returned, with the army of General Steele, to Little Rock, where it remained for the greater part of the following year. From the latter part of July to the latter part of August, 1864, it was stationed at Lewisburg, on the Arkansas River, 50 miles above Little Rock, returning to the latter place about the 1st of September. During this period of its service it seems to have been engaged in the ordinary routine of camp and garrison duty, as there is no record of its having come into contact with the enemy. There were a couple of changes in its brigade and division assignments, but no event of importance occurred to break the monotony of its experience until about the 1st of February, 1865, when it was assigned to an organization known as the "Detached Brigade of the Seventh Army Corps," under the command of Brigadier General E. A. Carr, with orders to proceed to New Orleans. After a tedious voyage the regiment reached New Orleans,—one wing under command of Colonel Benton, on February 14th, and the other, under Adjutant Lyman, two days later,—going into quarters at Algiers, on the opposite side of the river from the city. On February 20th it was conveyed by rail to Lakeport, on Lake Pontchartrain, and thence by steamer to Mobile Point, Ala. The vessel ran aground in Grant's Pass, and the troops were transferred to another steamer. The regiment disembarked on the 23d without tents or baggage, and went into bivouac at Navy Cove, three miles in rear of Fort Morgan. The preparations for the Mobile campaign now began. On March 17th, the army commenced its toilsome and difficult march. On March 25th it had arrived in the vicinity of Mobile, and at once began the investment of Spanish Fort. The Twenty-ninth Iowa performed its full share of duty on the march, and in the siege and capture of Spanish Fort, which was occupied by the Union troops on April 9th, when it immediately marched to the assistance of General Steele, who was then engaged in the siege of Fort Blakely, five miles above Spanish Fort. The regiment arrived just in time to witness the assault and capture of Fort Blakely, on the evening of Sunday, April 9, 1865.

On April 12th, the regiment entered the city of Mobile, and the next day marched with its brigade and division towards Mount Vernon Arsenal, forty miles above Mobile, on the Tombigbee River. During this march the Twenty-ninth Iowa had its last skirmish with the enemy. It had lost 22 men during the Mobile campaign, making its aggregate loss in battle 195. The regiment constituted the garrison at the Arsenal from the 22d of April to the 12th of May, 1865, returning to Mobile on the latter date. About the 1st of June, the regiment sailed on transports for Texas, and arrived at Brazos Santiago on the 9th, where it remained until the latter part of July, when, by order of Major General Sheridan, then in command of the Military Department of the Gulf, it was ordered to proceed to New Orleans, there to be mustered out. On the 10th day of August, 1865, the Twenty-ninth Iowa was mustered out of the service of the United States, at New Orleans, La. It was then conveyed by steamer to Davenport, Iowa, where it arrived on the 19th, and on the 25th of August, 1865, the regiment was formally disbanded and its officers and men took their departure for their respective homes. At the time of its disbandment, the Twenty-ninth Iowa had upon its rolls the names of 765 officers and enlisted men, but of this number only 415 were originally attached to the regiment. The remainder were recruits, who had been assigned to the Nineteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-third Regiments of Iowa Infantry, and transferred to the Twenty-ninth when those regiments were mustered out of the service. It will thus be seen that the Twenty-ninth Iowa had but 415 of its original members left when it was mustered out of the service. At the close of his history of the regiment, Adjutant Lyman says: "It was unfortunate in being kept so long in the Department of the Arkansas, away from the more brilliant fields of action. It was one of the best disciplined regiments in the army, never shrank from any duty required of it, and only needed the opportunity to make a record equal to that of any Iowa regiment. . . . Hence, at Helena, Terre Noir, Elkin's Ford, Prairie d'Ane, Camden, Jenkins' Ferry, Mobile, and on every other occasion where it has been called upon to meet the enemy, it responded with a degree of alacrity, soldierly skill and courage, unsurpassed by the troops of any of the armies that have borne a part in the great struggle for the Union." The impartial student of the military history of Iowa will fully acknowledge the justice and truth of the foregoing statement, and accord to the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Infantry its rightful place among the splendid regiments of the State. Its survivors may well be proud of its untarnished record.

THIRTIETH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The companies composing the Thirtieth Regiment of Iowa Infantry were ordered into quarters at Camp Lincoln, near Keokuk, Iowa, between the dates August 15 and September 2, 1862. The regiment was mustered into the service of the United States on September 23, 1862, by Lieutenant Charles J. Ball, of the Regular Army. At the date of muster in it had an aggregate strength of 967, which was increased by early additional enlistments of 11 men, making the total number 978, at the time the regiment left the State.¹ The compiler of this historical sketch can not attempt to go into particularity of detail in describing the operations of the Thirtieth Iowa, which embraced such a wide extent of territory and included so many important events during its period of nearly three years of active service. It will be his endeavor, however, to condense within the limits of this sketch a brief description of its most important operations and, in so far as limitation of space will permit, render as full and fair an account of its service as has been devoted to any of the Iowa regiments whose histories are recorded in the pages of the series of volumes which constitute this work. In the subjoined roster the record of each member of the regiment is given, in so far as it could be obtained from the official archives. Diligent effort has been made to make the revised roster as nearly accurate as possible, and it is believed that errors and omissions have been reduced to the minimum, as stated in the introductory article to this volume.

On October 25, 1862, the Thirtieth Iowa left its rendezvous at Keokuk and was conveyed by steamer to St. Louis, where arms, ammunition and the other requisite equipments for active service were issued to the regiment. After a brief stay in St. Louis, the regiment again embarked on one of the transports, (used by the government for the exclusive transportation of troops and army supplies,) and was conveyed to Helena, Ark. Great discomfort was experienced by the troops upon these transports, which were usually crowded to their utmost capacity, and the men were always glad when such voyages were ended. Upon its arrival at Helena, the regiment was assigned to the brigade commanded by General John M. Thayer. A detachment of the regiment participated in an expedition up the White River, and, upon its return, another detachment was sent—with the troops commanded by General Hovey—upon an expedition to the mouth of the Cold Water, on the Tallahatchie River. There is no record of any conflict with the enemy by either of these detachments, but they endured great hardship from exposure to the inclemency of the weather, from which much sickness resulted. These initial operations were succeeded by one of great importance, when the first movement against Vicksburg was undertaken by a large Union force, under the command of General Sherman, which was conveyed by a fleet of transports down the Mississippi River, and which was to co-operate with the army under General Grant, then marching south along the line of the Mississippi Central Railroad. The destruction of General Grant's depot of supplies at Holly Springs, Miss., compelled him to abandon his expedition and retire to Memphis, leaving General Sherman to make the attempt to capture the rebel stronghold at Vicksburg, with such forces as were immediately available for that purpose.

On December 21, 1862, the Thirtieth Iowa, with the other troops composing its brigade and division, embarked on transports at Helena and proceeded to join the army under General Sherman. Disembarking at a point on the Yazoo River about twelve miles above its mouth, these troops began the preliminary operations which culminated in the defeat of General Sherman at Chickasaw Bayou, and compelled the temporary abandonment of the movement against Vicksburg. The brigade commanded by General John M. Thayer was composed as follows: the Fourth, Ninth, Twenty-sixth, Thirtieth and Thirty-fourth Regiments of Iowa Infantry. The entire brigade took part in the preliminary fighting, but—as will be seen from the official reports—the Fourth Iowa Infantry was (by a misapprehension of orders) separated from the other regiments of its brigade, advanced with the other troops which assaulted the impregnable position of the enemy, and suffered very heavy loss. Had the entire brigade joined in the assault, the result would have no doubt been the same. The mistake made by General Steele, in his order to Colonel Abbott of the Thirtieth Iowa, was, therefore, one of those fortunate errors which sometimes occurred in battle, resulting in the prevention of a useless sacrifice of life. The heroic Colonel Williamson, of the Fourth Iowa, promptly obeyed the order which led to such disastrous results to his regiment. The equally heroic Colonel Abbott, of the Thirtieth Iowa, as promptly obeyed the order which checked the advance of his regiment, and saved it from the useless slaughter to which the Fourth Iowa was subjected. Such is the fortune of war. There could be no criticism upon any one of the regimental commanders of the brigade, or upon its commander, General Thayer, who, riding in advance of the Fourth Iowa Infantry, personally participated in the assault. The entire official report of Colonel Abbott, and the extracts from other official reports which follow, will explain the great discrepancy between the losses of the regiments engaged in the battle of Chickasaw Bayou:

HEADQUARTERS THIRTIETH IOWA INFANTRY,
THIRD BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTEENTH ARMY CORPS,
Arkansas Post, Ark., Jan. 12, 1863.

GENERAL: Agreeably to your order of the 9th inst., I have the honor to submit my report of the part my regiment took in the action of the 28th and 29th of December, 1862, at Haynes' Bluff, near Vicksburg, Miss.² On the morning of the 28th ultimo, by your order, I moved my regiment forward toward the point of attack, and took position immediately in the rear of the Fourth Iowa Infantry, supporting the battery in our front, where we remained until about 4 o'clock P. M., when we were, by your order, remanded to the river, with orders to embark on transport "Stephen Decatur" and drop down to Johnson's Plantation. On the morning of the 29th ultimo, we were ordered to disembark and, by you, placed in position in rear of the Fourth Iowa Infantry, with orders to keep close up and follow them. When we had advanced to within range of the enemy's guns, and they, having discovered our position, commenced shelling us, we were ordered by your Aide, Captain Richardson, to lie down and make ourselves as secure as possible under the levee, the Fourth Iowa Infantry being in a like position in our front on the opposite side of the levee, in which position we remained until ordered by your Aide-de-Camp to fix bayonets and advance, following the Fourth Iowa Infantry, which had got ten or twelve rods in advance. I immediately put my regiment under a double-quick, and had advanced but a few ²This was the battle officially designated as "Chickasaw Bayou." The designation "Haynes' Bluff" (which was near by) was therefore incorrect.

rods, when I was met by Brigadier General Steele, who checked us and ordered me to leave my horse, cross the next bayou in any way we could get across, and take my regiment to the right into the woods, and deploy as skirmishers. I put my regiment again under a double-quick and advanced to the extreme right of the Fourth Division. I then advanced my regiment in line of battle to within a few rods of the fallen timber, in which was heavy firing of musketry. I then ordered them to lie down; ordered the right and left flanking companies forward as skirmishers into the fallen timber. They went in and soon reported that the Thirteenth United States Infantry already occupied the ground and were engaged with the enemy, who were posted in rifle pits. I then ordered those companies back to their position in the regiment. The first Wisconsin Battery, immediately on our right, was supported by a part of the Thirteenth United States Infantry, while skirmishers of the Thirteenth Infantry on our front were unsupported. I sent my orderly to General Steele for further orders, who returned with orders to remain where we were. While my orderly was absent to see General Steele, a Captain, representing himself as the Aide-de-Camp of General Smith, came to us and inquired what regiment we were, and told me the position of my regiment was all right, lying upon the ground in front of the enemy. We had three men severely and one slightly wounded. We remained under fire from about noon until 4 o'clock P. M., when we were ordered to return. I accordingly marched my regiment near the position occupied by General Steele, and reported to him and then to you, who came up soon after. I was ordered by you into camp to the rear. With sentiments of high regard, I remain, General, your most obedient servant,

CHARLES H. ABBOTT,

Colonel, Thirtieth Iowa Infantry.

BRIGADIER GENERAL JOHN M. THAYER, *Third Brigade,
Fourth Division, Thirteenth Army Corps.*³

The following brief extracts from the official report of General John M. Thayer, who commanded the brigade, will serve to show that he approved the conduct of Colonel Abbott, in obeying the order of his division commander, as that officer had the authority to countermand the orders he had previously given. General Thayer says:

. . . We were still advancing in front of the enemy's rifle pits and batteries and crossed over a high rail fence. On seeing the ground, I at once formed my plan to move up the hill, when, looking back for my other regiments, to my amazement none were to be seen, and none coming, for I could then see back to the point from which I had started. I could not account for it. I had supposed that five regiments were following me. I found myself within the enemy's works with but one regiment. . . . I observed our forces, which had entered the works away to my left, retiring, which of course added to our extreme peril. The Fourth Iowa was then drawing the concentrated fire of all the enemy's batteries and rifle pits. I directed Colonel Williamson to hold the position, if possible, till I could get up reinforcements, but, if he could not, to retire. . . . Colonel Williamson was compelled to bring off his regiment, which he did in good order. It was nothing but slaughter for it to remain. During the half hour it was there 7 men were killed and 104 wounded. On inquiring of Colonel Abbott, of the Thirtieth Iowa, which was next in line to the Fourth Iowa, why he did not follow the Fourth, I found that, after I had started, he had been ordered by General Steele, in person, to turn off to the right to take another position. I had directed the commander of each regiment to follow the preceding one. The second regiment of my column being turned aside, it broke my line, cutting off four regiments, without my knowledge, leaving the Fourth Iowa going ahead alone. The conduct of Colonel Williamson, his officers and men, through this trying ordeal, is worthy of the highest praise. . . .⁴

⁴War of the Rebellion Official Records, Vol. 17, Series 1, Part 1, pages 658, 9.

The following statement is made in the official report of General Steele, and shows conclusively that Colonel Abbott was acting strictly in accordance with his orders:

. . . General Morgan finally told me that he was going to storm the heights without waiting for the bridge to be completed. He requested me to support the storming party with what force I had. On being informed that Thayer's brigade was at hand, and that Hovey's would soon be up, he gave some orders to Thayer in regard to the route which his brigade should take, and sent a guide to lead him. After Thayer had passed with the Fourth Iowa Infantry—Colonel Williamson—General Morgan asked me how many troops I had. I told him Thayer's brigade; one of his regiments, however, the Twenty-sixth Iowa, was detached to cut a road, but that I did not know whether any of Hovey's had arrived or not. He then asked me to turn part of the troops a little farther to the right. I, therefore, directed Colonel Charles H. Abbott, of the Thirtieth Iowa Infantry, a little to the right, supposing the object of this was to facilitate the crossing of the troops over the bayou, by preventing them from all huddling into the same place. At the time I did not know that there was any dry crossing and I presume General Morgan was not aware of the fact. The troops that I directed to the right it seems did not get across the bayou, but General Thayer went gallantly on with the Fourth Iowa, and, instead of being a support to the storming party, was soon in the advance, and entered the enemy's second line of rifle-pits nearly as soon as any. I gave no orders on the field that day except at the suggestion of General Morgan. . . .⁵

It will thus be seen that the statement of both Generals confirms Colonel Abbott's report, and shows that the Thirtieth Iowa was only prevented from joining the Fourth Iowa in that desperate charge by the personal order of General Steele, which its commander was in duty bound to obey. An analysis of the return of casualties in the Union forces commanded by Major General William T. Sherman, in the engagement at Chickasaw Bayou, December 28 and 29, 1862, reveals the remarkable fact that, of the thirty-eight organizations which were engaged, there were only eight which sustained a loss of over one hundred each in killed, wounded and missing. The aggregate loss of those eight regiments was 1,393, while the aggregate loss of the other thirty organizations was but 383, and, of those, there were nineteen which sustained a loss of less than ten each.⁶ In his official report, General Sherman fully describes the positions of the opposing forces, gives his reasons for attempting to dislodge the enemy from his strong position and the causes which contributed to the disastrous repulse of his troops. He attributes his failure to the strength of the enemy's position, both natural and artificial, and not to his superior fighting, although he does not attempt to discredit the bravery and fortitude shown by the rebel troops. In summing up the results, he says: "When the night of the 29th closed in we stood upon our original ground and had suffered a repulse. The effort was necessary to a successful accomplishment of my orders, and the combinations were the best possible under the circumstances. I assume all the responsibility and attach fault to no one."⁷ In its first experience in battle, the Thirtieth Iowa had acquitted itself with honor, and had shown its conformity to discipline in obeying orders which prevented it from doing what its officers and men would have preferred—participating with the Fourth Iowa and the other troops who joined in the assault upon the enemy's works.

Having failed in his attempt to capture Vicksburg, General Sherman withdrew his troops and, embarking them upon transports, moved down the Yazoo River, and at once began the movement against Arkansas Post. The Thirtieth Iowa, with the other regiments of its brigade, bore a prominent part in the operations which culminated in the capture of that stronghold of the enemy. Colonel Abbott being seriously ill, the command of the regiment devolved upon Lieutenant Colonel Torrence, whose official report is here given in full:

HEADQUARTERS, THIRTIETH IOWA INFANTRY,

Post Arkansas, Ark., January 13, 1863.

COLONEL: Agreeably to order, I have the honor to report to you the part the regiment took, while acting under my command, in the late battle of January 11, 1863. After disengaging my troops of everything in the way of luggage which might be disposed of, by order of General Thayer, I gave direction to follow close up by the right flank the First Battalion, Third Brigade, Fifteenth Army Corps; to form line of battle on its left, at a designated point, if practicable, and, if not, to form line of battle in its rear, and advance as it advanced, and halt as it halted, and in every move to act in conjunction with it. But, after striking the double-quick, I very soon found it impossible to form either on its left or rear, and I halted my command and allowed the first battalion to file by. This being done, I instantly formed line of battle and moved forward through the timber, over logs and brush, as best I could, until within 150 or 175 yards of the enemy's breastworks, forming his extreme left, when I came to an open space of ground. Here I halted, giving instructions to fire, lie down and load, and fire lying down, which they did for the space of about three hours, during which time they did but little more than silence and keep silent some small artillery pieces planted by the enemy at that part of the breastworks, together with the musketry in the hands of the enemy in the rifle pits. During said time no change of position was made save one, when by a flank movement I shifted farther to the right. This secured me a more strong hold of the enemy's left. Here we remained until the order was given all along the lines to cease firing, as the enemy had hoisted a white flag. After firing ceased on the right, the enemy rose up in great numbers from their rifle-pits, in full view. I was about moving my command forward, when, to my great astonishment and mortification, two of my best line officers were wounded by the enemy, viz.: Captain Uley Burk, Company I, in hand, and Lieutenant Alexander, of same company, in left arm, (neither of which is considered dangerous,) and was thus engaged, when General Thayer in person directed my color-guard to advance and plant our colors upon the enemy's works, which was promptly done. At the same time General Thayer gave orders for the regiment to come inside the breastworks and prevent straggling parties retreating by their left rear. Soon after, the entire regiment was detailed to conduct the prisoners up to and inside of the fortifications, where General Sherman had them taken up to his headquarters. This latter duty proved more arduous than it should have been but for the tardiness of the regiments detailed, by order of the General commanding, to be placed under Colonel Grier, of the Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers, who had orders to take charge of the prisoners for the night. It was after midnight before the regiment was relieved. There is nothing further which I deem it my duty to mention, save that both officers and men generally acted well for new troops. I might mention with great propriety a few striking instances of cool and commendable courage displayed by some of my men, they having fallen under my immediate notice during the action, but I forbear mentioning any save one, and that is the case of James M. Smith, private of Company C, a single young man, not yet arrived at his majority, who has been doing the duties of Adjutant for some time past, owing to the indisposition of the Adjutant. I have been familiarly conversant with him for the last two months and find him to be a young man of irreproachable moral character and one altogether deserving of public confidence. His conduct on the battlefield in the late engagement was such as to secure implicit confidence in his courage and ability, and to justify the belief that he is entirely capable of filling a more important position than he now does. Hoping this will meet with your approval, I remain, Colonel, your obedient servant,

W. M. G. TORRENCE,

Lieutenant Colonel, Thirtieth Iowa Volunteers.

COLONEL CHARLES H. ABBOTT.*

*War of the Rebellion Official Records, Vol. 17, Series 1, Part 1, pages 770, 1. Also found embodied in report of Colonel Abbott to General Thayer, on page 493, Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1864.

The casualties of the Thirtieth Iowa in this battle were: Killed, 5; wounded, 38; total, 43.⁹ The list of killed and wounded appended to the report of Colonel Abbott, subsequently published in the report of the Adjutant General of Iowa, shows a total of 45 killed and wounded in the Thirtieth Iowa.¹⁰ There were five Iowa regiments belonging to the brigade, and also the First Iowa Battery, all of which took part in the engagement. The Thirtieth Iowa stands second in the list in the number of casualties, the Twenty-sixth Iowa having sustained the greatest loss. The brigade lost 180 men and officers, killed and wounded. The loss in the Thirtieth Iowa was, therefore, considerably above the average of the brigade. The regiment had again fully sustained the honor of its State, in conflict on the field of battle. Its conduct was highly commended in the official report of the brigade and division commander. Lack of space will only permit the insertion of the following brief extract from the report of General Thayer, the brigade commander: "The Thirtieth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Torrence, (Colonel Abbott being sick,) also occupied an advanced position, and was warmly engaged, supported by the Thirty-fourth Iowa, Colonel Clark."¹¹ General Thayer also states that his horse was killed early in the engagement, and that he had valuable assistance from General Vandever, of Iowa, who came upon the field and took temporary command of his old regiment, the Ninth Iowa Infantry.

The Thirtieth Iowa now returned with Sherman's army to the vicinity of Vicksburg, and went into encampment near Young's Point. It was engaged with the other troops in the arduous work of attempting to change the course of the Mississippi River, by means of a canal, during most of the remainder of the winter, and its officers and men suffered greatly from exposure and the inevitable sickness which ensued. Early in April the regiment started with its brigade and division on the expedition to Greenville, Miss., which extended about fifty miles into the interior, and inflicted much damage upon the enemy, by the capture of large quantities of supplies, intended for the use of the rebel army. It returned from that expedition to Milliken's Bend, from which point it soon after started to join the main army under the command of General Grant, in the prosecution of that memorable campaign which led up to the siege and surrender of Vicksburg and, later, to the defeat of the rebel army under General Johnston, and the beginning of the end of the great war of the rebellion.¹²

On May 2, 1863, the regiment with its brigade proceeded in the direction of Jackson, Miss., where it arrived on the 14th, and participated in the engagement which resulted in the capture of that place. It assisted in the destruction of the railroad near Jackson, and then marched in the direction of

The names of the killed and wounded in this battle, and in all the battles in which the regiment was engaged, together with the names of all those who died from wounds, disease or from whatever cause, will be found noted in the subjoined roster; also the personal record of service of each officer and enlisted man who was at any time a member of the regiment.

¹²The compiler of this historical sketch regrets that the limitation of space to which he is subjected will preclude further quotations from official reports. He has included those of the two first battles in which the regiment participated, mainly because of the fact that the gallant officers who wrote them were subsequently killed in battle. He is impelled to the belief that the surviving comrades of Colonels Abbott and Torrence would wish to have their reports embodied in this brief history. The further operations of the regiment embrace so many important events, however, that to condense them into the limits of a brief historical sketch involves the necessity of the elimination of the numerous official reports which give all the details of those events. He can, therefore, only make reference to those reports from which the material for this history is obtained.

Vicksburg. It reached the outer line of the enemy's works at Walnut Hills, on May 18th, and was assigned to a position as part of the investing force, in the Third Brigade of the First Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps. General Thayer was in command of the brigade, General Steele of the division, and General Sherman of the corps. Colonel Abbott had sufficiently recovered to enable him to resume command of his regiment. The rebel army, under the command of General Pemberton, had fought bravely and stubbornly in the series of battles preceding its being driven within the defenses of Vicksburg. Its numbers had been underestimated. In the official report of Captains Frederick E. Prime and Cyrus B. Comstock, General Grant's Chief Engineers, the strength of the enemy's position was shown to be so formidable that an attempt to carry it by direct assault could not be successful.¹³ The reason given for making the attempt was, that our own troops, buoyant with success, were eager for an assault, and would not be satisfied if the slow process of a siege were undertaken, before it had been shown to be impossible to storm and capture the works. General Grant's judgment seems to have been at first opposed to making a general assault, as shown by his official report.¹⁴ He clearly sets forth his reasons for finally giving the order. Among the officers who were most insistent upon making the attempt was Major General John A. McClernand, then in command of the Thirteenth Army Corps, who was very confident that he could capture the enemy's works in his front by a bold and determined assault of his own corps, and without assistance from other troops. That he was greatly mistaken is evidenced by the fact that, soon after the assault began, he called for reinforcements.

On May 19th, 20th and 21st, the Thirtieth Iowa was engaged in skirmishing with the enemy, who kept up an almost constant fire from behind his rifle pits in front of the regiment and, on May 22d, when the order was received to move forward to the assault, the regiment promptly took its place in line with the charging column. It was in the very thickest of the fight, and its officers and men displayed the greatest gallantry. It was a brief but bloody conflict. The valor of the Union troops could not avail against the impregnable position and determined resistance of the enemy. In that brief quarter of an hour—which to the men engaged seemed a much longer period—the Thirtieth Iowa sustained a loss of sixty-four, killed and wounded. Among the killed was the gallant Colonel Abbott, who fell while bravely leading his command to the assault. Major Milliken was mortally wounded and died the next day. Captain Letner was mortally wounded and died on the 29th. Lieutenant Chester was among the severely wounded. It was a sad but glorious day in the history of the regiment. It had done all that was possible to achieve victory, had bravely held its place in line until ordered to retire, and came out of the fight with as high honor as if it had succeeded in its heroic attempt. The assault had failed at all points on the line, and it became evident that Vicksburg could only be taken after a series of siege operations extending over a considerable length of time. The regular siege was therefore undertaken and prosecuted with great vigor until July 4, 1863, on which date the rebel commander, after negotiating with General Grant for the best terms obtainable, surrendered his army and the stronghold he had so long and valiantly defended. During the protracted siege, the Thirtieth Iowa had borne its full share of danger and the exposure and hardships incident to the conduct of such operations, and had received the cordial commendations of its brigade and division commanders for the faithful manner in which it complied with their orders.

¹⁴Report of the Adjutant General of Iowa, 1864, pages 589 to 604 inclusive. Report of Major General U. S. Grant, covering the operations of his army on the Vicksburg Campaign.

On the morning after the surrender—without having the opportunity to view the inside of the works and the city it had fought so hard to capture—the regiment again took up the line of march with the army under General Sherman, and participated in the operations which ended with the defeat of the rebel General Johnston's army and the capture of Jackson. It then returned to Black River Bridge and went into camp, where it remained until near the close of September, 1863. It had richly earned this brief season of comparative rest and repose. Lieutenant Colonel Torrence had succeeded the lamented Colonel Abbott as Colonel of the regiment. Captain Aurelius Roberts, of Company C, had been promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain Robert D. Creamer, of Company G, was promoted to Major. The date of the commissions of all three of these officers was June 27, 1863. On September 27, 1863, the regiment moved with the army commanded by General Sherman, by way of Memphis and Corinth, to the relief of the army at Chattanooga, then in a state of siege by a greatly superior rebel force. The situation of the Union army at Chattanooga was growing desperate, from lack of supplies and the constantly increasing strength of the rebel army in that vicinity. It therefore became a matter of the utmost importance that Sherman's army should move with the greatest celerity, and, under the leadership of that able and energetic General, the endurance and fortitude of the officers and men was put to the severest test. Corinth, Miss., was reached on October 8th, Iuka on the 10th, and Cherokee Station, Ala., on the 21st. At the latter place the enemy was encountered, and the Thirtieth Iowa sustained a loss of twenty-seven killed and wounded. Among the killed was the able and much beloved Colonel Torrence. While the regiment lay in camp at Iuka, the following letter—probably the last official communication that Colonel Torrence ever wrote—was sent to the Adjutant General of Iowa:

HEADQUARTERS THIRTIETH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEERS,
Iuka, Miss., October 13, 1863.

N. B. BAKER, Adjutant General of Iowa: Accompanying this you will receive two flags, worn out in the service. They were carried by the Thirtieth Iowa during their marches, a distance of 5,700 miles, between October 26, 1862 and October 10, 1863. They were carried in the following named battles, to-wit: Chickasaw Bayou, December 28 and 29, 1862; Arkansas Post, January 10 and 11, 1863; Jackson, Miss., May 14, 1863; Siege of Vicksburg from May 18 to July 4, 1863; Clinton, Miss. July 11, 1862; Jackson, Miss., July 12, 13, 14 and 15, 1863; Brandon, Miss., July 18, 1863. It is the wish of the regiment that you forward them to the State Historical Society, there to be retained, subject to the order of the commanding officer of the regiment.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. M. G. TORRENCE, Colonel Commanding.¹⁵

Colonel Torrence had performed faithful service for his country in the war with Mexico, and had also served as Major in the First Iowa Cavalry with honor and distinction, tendering his resignation of that office when he received the appointment of Lieutenant Colonel of the Thirtieth Iowa Infantry. He was killed while gallantly leading his regiment. Among the other casualties sustained by the regiment in the engagement at Cherokee Station was the death of Captain William H. Randall, who was mortally wounded and died the same day. Captain Matthew Clark was also severely wounded, and subsequently died from the effects of the wound. Captains H. C. Hall and Joseph Smith and Adjutant James H. Clendening were all severely wounded. The official report of General Osterhaus,¹⁶ the division commander, states that only the Second Brigade of his division became engaged. This was the brigade to which the Thirtieth Iowa was attached, and was commanded by Colonel Williamson of the Ninth Iowa Infantry. The enemy was defeated with heavy loss.

On the morning of November 3d, the regiment with its brigade and division again took up the line of march, which was continued for twenty days, with the exception of a brief halt at Bridgeport, Ala., and, on November 23d, reached the base of Lookout Mountain. General Osterhaus' division was temporarily assigned to General Hooker's command and, with it, fought in the famous battle above the clouds, on Lookout Mountain, November 24th; Missionary Ridge, on the 25th, and at Ringgold on the 26th. In these three engagements the Thirtieth Iowa bore its full part, sustaining a loss of three killed and twenty-five wounded. From Ringgold, the regiment marched, by way of Chattanooga and Bridgeport, to Woodville, Ala., where it arrived December 27, 1863, and where it remained for the greater part of the time until the 2d of May, 1864. This was the longest period of inactivity in its history, broken only when, for a short time, it was engaged in guarding an important ferry southwest of Huntsville, Ala.

On the 2d of May, 1864, the regiment again took up the line of march and moved, by way of Stevenson, Bridgeport, Chattanooga, Gordon's Mills, Villanow and Snake Creek Gap, to Resaca, Ga. At the latter place it again encountered the enemy. It participated in the series of engagements which occurred in the vicinity of Resaca, on the 13th, 14th and 15th of May, in which its loss was five killed and twenty-eight wounded. Pushing on, with its brigade and division, the regiment reached Dallas, Ga., on May 25th, where it assisted in the construction of a strong defensive line of works, from behind which it successfully resisted a determined assault of the enemy, losing one man killed and one wounded. The advance was resumed on June 2d, and then began a series of skirmishes with the enemy which continued all the way to Kenesaw Mountain, where the enemy was found intrenched in a seemingly impregnable position. From June 10th to July 3d there was almost continuous fighting around Kenesaw Mountain, in which the Thirtieth Iowa had its full share. The infantry, on both sides, fought mainly from behind breastworks and rifle pits. The artillery was also very active, both the Union and rebel batteries keeping up their fire, and often changing positions to avoid getting too directly in range of the sharpshooters, who were constantly on the alert to pick off the gunners. Thus the combat raged around the mountain, the rebels always fighting from their comparatively secure positions behind their strong intrenchments, and the Union troops from time to time leaving their works and making desperate attempts to carry the mountain by direct assault, but always being driven back with heavy loss. Finally, General Sherman succeeded in reaching a position, with a part of his army, to the right and rear of the rebel position on Kenesaw Mountain, thus threatening to cut off the enemy's line of retreat, and compelling the abandonment of the strong position which had been so long and so gallantly defended. The rebel army then retired to his line of defenses on the Chattahoochee River, with Sherman's army following closely in pursuit.

The next movement in which the Thirtieth Iowa and the other regiments of its brigade were active participants was by way of Marietta, Roswell and Decatur, and on toward Atlanta, during which the great battles of July 22d and 28th were fought. During the month of August, which ended with the repulse of the rebel attack upon the Union lines at Jonesboro, the regiment had been engaged with the other troops in building earthworks and skirmishing with the enemy. On the night of August 31st, the rebel army withdrew from Atlanta and began its retreat. The Thirtieth Iowa had lost during the Atlanta campaign—from May 2d to September 6th—sixteen killed and sixty-five wounded.¹⁷ ¹⁷Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 1191 to 1193 inclusive, and subjoined roster.

During the greater part of September the regiment lay in camp at East Point. On the 4th of October it joined in the pursuit of the rebel army under General Hood. The pursuit was continued through Marietta, Resaca and Gaylesville to Gadsden. There is no record of the regiment having come into contact with the enemy on this march. The cavalry, having the advance, did most of the fighting. General Hood succeeded in escaping with his army, but, in the following month, met with an overwhelming defeat by the Union forces, commanded by Major General George H. Thomas, at the battle of Nashville. The rebels were meeting with reverses wherever they were encountered, but they still continued to fight with desperate courage worthy of a better cause. The so-called government of the Confederate States of America was tottering to its fall.

The Thirtieth Iowa arrived at Atlanta on November 4, 1863, just one month from the time it had joined the other troops in that long and toilsome march in the pursuit of Hood. General Sherman was now making his preparations for that wonderful campaign through the very heart of the enemy's country—the great march “from Atlanta to the sea.” The Thirtieth Iowa performed its full share of service, with its brigade and division, upon that long and arduous march which began at Atlanta on November 15th and ended with the occupation of Savannah on December 21, 1864. The regiment performed the duty of provost guards in the city of Savannah until January 10, 1865, upon which date it embarked on an ocean steamer for Beaufort, S. C., where it landed and moved to Pocomtigo, on the line of the Charleston Railroad, and went into camp. On February 1, 1865, the Thirtieth Iowa, with its brigade, again took up the line of march. The campaign through the Carolinas had begun. The regiment participated in the capture of Columbia, S. C., on February 17th, and then continued the march, over difficult roads and through almost impassable swamps. At Bentonville, N. C., the regiment had its last encounter with the enemy, in which it sustained a loss of one man killed and seven wounded. The march was continued and, on April 14, 1865, the rebel General Johnston asked for a cessation of hostilities, with a view of negotiating with General Sherman for the terms upon which he could surrender his army. The preliminaries having been arranged, the two Generals met at the point designated, between their respective armies, and arranged the terms of surrender, which was formally made on April 26, 1865, and which virtually ended the great War of the Rebellion.¹⁸

Upon the surrender of the rebel army, the Thirtieth Iowa, and the troops with which it was associated, resumed the triumphal march, passing through Petersburg, Richmond and Fredericksburg, and reaching Alexandria, near the National Capital, on May 10th. On May 24th, the regiment took part in that splendid military pageant, the Grand Review of Sherman's Army, by the President and General Grant. It then returned to its camp, where it remained until June 5, 1865, on which date it was mustered out of the service of the United States. Transportation by rail was provided, and the regiment was soon on its way to Iowa. A sad accident occurred near Sumner Hill, Pa., in which Sergeant P. C. Bradshaw, of Company H, was killed, and nine other members of the regiment were injured. It seemed doubly sad that death and suffering should come to these men who had safely passed through the dangers and hardships of war and were looking forward to the glad greeting which awaited them at their homes.

Upon arriving at Davenport, Iowa, the regiment was disbanded and the survivors returned to their homes, there to resume and discharge their duties as citizens with the same fidelity and honor which had distinguished their record as soldiers. From the time it entered the service to the day it was mustered out, the regiment had maintained an unblemished record. It participated in twenty-one battles and numerous skirmishes, in all of which its officers and men exhibited the utmost bravery and fortitude. After the death of Colonels Abbott and Torrence, the regiment was commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Roberts. But few Iowa regiments sustained a heavier percentage of loss in battle or endured greater hardships in the service. The survivors of the Thirtieth Iowa may well entertain a feeling of pride in having helped to make its glorious record. The General Assembly of the State has performed a sacred duty in making provision for the permanent preservation of that record, together with that of all the brave men of Iowa who went forth in the vigor of their young manhood to do battle for their country.

Thirty-first Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Infantry

THIRTY-FIRST REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The ten companies which were to constitute the Thirty-first Regiment were ordered into quarters by the Governor of Iowa, on dates ranging from September 1 to 19, 1862. Camp Herron, near Davenport, Iowa, was the designated place of rendezvous. The companies were mustered into the service of the United States by Captain H. B. Hendershott and Lieutenant H. C. Freeman, of the Regular Army, on dates ranging from September 15 to October 13, 1862, and the complete organization of the regiment was perfected on the latter date. The aggregate strength of the regiment at muster in was 970, and early additional enlistments of seven men brought the number up to 977, at the time the regiment left its rendezvous to begin its experience of active service in the field.¹ The original roster shows that Colonel William Smyth was commissioned August 10, 1862, and that the organization of the regiment of which he was to take command was authorized by the Governor of Iowa, under the proclamation of the President of the United States, bearing date July 2, 1862. The compiler of this historical sketch has had recourse to the official reports of the Adjutant General of Iowa, and the official records of the War of the Rebellion, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of War, and his history of the operations of the regiment is compiled from the information thus obtained. On account of limitation of space, this sketch will include only the leading events in its history, without going into particularity of detail, but it will be the endeavor of the compiler to include all the most important operations in which the regiment participated during its term of service. On account of the intimate association of the Thirty-first Iowa with other Iowa regiments, whose histories appear in the pages of this work, repetition to a considerable extent is unavoidable. The history of those regiments which served in the same brigade with the Thirty-first Iowa, commanded during the greater part of their terms of service by Colonel Williamson of the Fourth, and Colonel Stone of the Twenty-fifth, Iowa, are inseparably interwoven. They were together in many long and weary marches and hard fought battles, and their officers and men came to know each other so well they were almost as closely connected as were the different companies of their respective regiments.

In his account of the operations of the Thirty-first Iowa, covering the period from the date of its entry into the service to the 21st day of December, 1864, Lieutenant Colonel J. W. Jenkins has embodied every important operation of the regiment during that period of its service.² While no official reports or extracts from same are included in his account, it is so admirably condensed that the compiler of this sketch feels impelled to quote the greater portion of it, believing it to be a just and accurate statement of the service of the regiment, between the dates mentioned:

²Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 1193 to 1196 inclusive. Sketch of operations of the Thirty-first Iowa, from its organization to December 21, 1864, by Lieutenant Colonel J. W. Jenkins.

. . . . The regiment, commanded by Colonel William Smyth, took transport and moved down the river, on the 1st of November, 1862, and on the 20th arrived at Helena, Ark., and went into camp. On the 27th of the same month, started on an expedition to the Cold Water River in Mississippi, usually called the Hovey expedition. Arrived again at Helena on the 7th of December, 1862. Started down the Mississippi on the Yazoo River expedition, December 22d, arriving at the mouth of the Yazoo on the 25th of December. The forces under General Sherman engaged the enemy at Chickasaw Bayou, on the 27th, 28th and 29th of December. The regiment was partially engaged on these days.³ On the 2d of January, 1863, it was transported down the Yazoo, and up the White River in Arkansas, thence through a bayou into the Arkansas, and arrived near Arkansas Post on the 9th. On the night of the 10th, marched through swamps and mire to the rear of the enemy's works, and on the 11th was hotly engaged in the capture of the place.

On the 15th took transport again, and passed from the Arkansas into the Mississippi River, arriving at Young's Point January 22d, where we went into camp near the Butler ditch, usually termed "canal," and remained until the 2d of April. We then, with Steele's whole division, and Steele in command, proceeded up the Mississippi River to Greenville, Miss., where we arrived on the 4th, went into the country, and had a skirmish with the enemy on the 7th, near Deer Creek. We remained here, capturing mules, cattle, horses, hogs, negroes, etc., until the 25th, when the whole division returned to Young's Point, La., arriving on the 26th. On the 27th crossed over to Milliken's Bend, and, on the 1st day of May, with Grant's whole army, we moved towards Grand Gulf, Miss., arriving at that place May 7th, and with the army moved towards Jackson, Miss.

The regiment was under fire at Raymond on the 12th, was engaged in the taking of Jackson on the 14th, and was more or less under fire at Black River on the 16th, followed up the enemy under fire every day, and, on the 18th, reached the rear of Vicksburg. On the 22d it engaged in a terrible but unsuccessful charge on the enemy's works; and from this time was steadily under the enemy's fire till the fall of Vicksburg, on the 4th day of July. The regiment started, under General Sherman, for Jackson, Miss., on the 5th of July, being under fire till the second evacuation of that place, when it moved to Canton, Miss., where it was engaged in a severe skirmish with the enemy. Returned to Black River on the 27th of July, and went into camp, where it remained until the 22d of September, when, with the Fifteenth Army Corps, commanded by General W. T. Sherman, it moved to Vicksburg and, embarking on transports, arrived at Memphis on the 27th of September. On the 29th of September, the regiment moved by railroad to Corinth, Miss., where it remained until October 11th, thence marched to Iuka, Miss., and to Cherokee on the 20th. On the morning of the 21st, at the latter place, the regiment had a severe engagement with rebel cavalry. On the 26th and 27th, had a running fight with the enemy, driving him beyond Tusculumbia, and again returning to Cherokee Station. On the 28th crossed the Tennessee River at Eastport, and with Sherman's entire corps moved east, from thence, on the 4th of November, reaching Lookout Valley in Tennessee on the 23d.

On November 24th, was engaged in taking Lookout Mountain, where the First Division, Fifteenth Corps, commanded by Brigadier General P. J. Osterhaus, bore a conspicuous part, the Thirty-first Iowa being hotly engaged during the whole of the action. On the 25th had equally hard fighting on Mission Ridge, driving the enemy from their stronghold. Here, also, on the 27th, Osterhaus' division, with Hooker's Corps, followed up the enemy, and again encountered them at Ringgold and Taylor's Hills, where the regiment was hotly engaged during the fight and suffered much. It remained at Ringgold till the 1st day of December, when it moved back to Chattanooga and thence to Bridgeport, where, with the division, it arrived on the 5th. Left Bridgeport about the 22d, moved west, and arrived at Woodville, Ala., on the 27th, where the division went into winter quarters, and remained until the 1st day of May, 1864.

On the morning of May 1, 1864, the Thirty-first Iowa, Second Brigade (commanded by Colonel Williamson, Fourth Iowa), of First Division (General Osterhaus), of the ³The casualties are not included in this account of Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins, but were subsequently reported to the Adjutant General of Iowa, and will be found noted in the subjoined roster, together with all casualties, from whatever cause, sustained by the regiment during its entire term of service.

Fifteenth Army Corps, moved from Woodville east, reached Snake Creek Gap, Ga., on the 9th, where we encountered the enemy in force. Skirmished more or less every day and, on the 13th, near Resaca, had a severe fight with the enemy, in which Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins was severely wounded.⁴ Skirmished very severely all day on the 14th and 15th, when, on the night of the 15th, the enemy evacuated, and retreated towards Atlanta.

The regiment lay in camp at Kingston, Ga., from the night of the 19th until the morning of the 23d, waiting for supplies; then moved on, and encountered the enemy at Dallas, on the night of the 26th, engaging in a severe skirmish. On the morning of the 27th, the enemy attacked us at daylight. The fighting was severe, but of short duration, the enemy being driven back. Had considerable skirmishing during the 27th, and on the 28th a charge was made on our works in which our regiment was engaged, repulsing the enemy. It was also engaged in more or less fighting and skirmishing during the 29th, 30th and 31st. On the 1st day of June, the regiment moved to New Hope Church, and occupied rifle pits, under the fire of the enemy, until the morning of the 6th, when it removed to Ackworth, remaining there until the 10th, when it moved to Big Shanty, ten miles distant, where we encountered the enemy in force. Was engaged in guarding a wagon train till the 15th, when it moved into rifle pits near Kenesaw Mountain, charged the enemy, and drove them from their front line. From the 15th to the 28th was constantly under fire in rifle pits, in different positions, on the 28th making a charge on the enemy's works, being repulsed with great loss. It was constantly under fire until the eve of July 3d, when the enemy evacuated Kenesaw Mountain.

On July 4th, the regiment moved up and encountered the enemy again at the Chattahoochee River, built works, and remained there under fire until the 11th. Moved through Marietta to Roswell, Ga., on the above named river. Here the Thirty-first was left to guard trains from the 14th until the 27th of July, when it went to Vining Station on the railroad, with the train, and remained there as guard until the morning of August 2d, when it joined our brigade near Atlanta. The regiment went into rifle pits on the 5th, remaining under severe fire until the night of August 26th, when it moved at dark towards Jonesboro, on the Macon Railroad; destroyed the Montgomery Railroad during the 29th, and reached the vicinity of Jonesboro on the 30th, building works during the night. On the 31st the rebels made a desperate charge several times on our works and the whole line, and were repulsed each time. The regiment was under fire until the morning of the 2d day of September, when the enemy left Jonesboro. Our forces having followed up and confronted him again at Lovejoy, seven miles distant, the regiment was again under fire until the 7th, when it retired to East Point, arriving on the 8th. Went into camp and remained until the 4th of October, when, with a large portion of Sherman's army, it moved north in pursuit of Hood, skirmishing with him at Resaca, Snake Creek Gap, and Little River. Then returned to Vining Station, near Atlanta, having marched 300 miles in the chase after Hood. Arrived at Vining Station on the 6th of November. Remained in camp until the 13th. Moved to Atlanta on the 15th, then moved southeast, with Sherman's entire army, into the heart of Georgia.

The regiment was engaged in skirmishing as it passed Macon, Ga., on the 21st, 22d and 23d. Marching about fifteen miles per day, in a southeast direction, it reached the rear of Savannah, Ga., on the 10th of December, making a distance of 304 miles. On the night of the 20th of December, the enemy evacuated Savannah, and the regiment, with the whole army, entered the city on the morning of the 21st of December, 1864.

The foregoing account brings the condensed history of the regiment down to the close of the Georgia campaign. Before entering upon a description of its subsequent operations, it is a simple matter of justice to state that, during that portion of the Atlanta campaign, between the dates May 23d and June 5th, the events briefly described by Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins are also described in the official report of Colonel William Smyth,⁵ with such complete reference to ⁴Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins had been previously wounded, (at Vicksburg, May 22, 1863,) but made no mention of his wound in his account of that engagement. See his personal record in subjoined roster.

details, however, that its quotation would have required a greater amount of space than has thus far been devoted to this sketch. The compiler—in view of the limitation of space to which he is subjected—can, therefore, only make reference to this report and, in the continuation of this historical sketch, will make quotation only from such reports as refer in a general way to the most important operations in which the regiment participated. Near the close of his report, (from which the foregoing quotation was made,) Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins states that Colonel Smyth commanded the regiment from the time of its organization until the 13th of August, 1863; at which time—Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins being absent, on account of wounds received at Vicksburg, on May 22, 1863—the command devolved upon Major Stimming until August 22, 1863, upon which date Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins rejoined the regiment, which he commanded from that date to February 1, 1864, when he took command of the brigade. Major Stimming then resumed command of the regiment until March 10, 1864. Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins then returned to the command, which he retained until March 20th, upon which date he went home on leave of absence, and Major Stimming again commanded to April 20, 1864. Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins returning, resumed command until May 1, 1864, when Colonel Smyth rejoined the regiment and remained in command of it until September 25, 1864, when he was assigned to the command of the brigade, leaving Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins again in command of the regiment. The record shows that Colonel Smyth resigned December 15, 1864, and that Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins was mustered out with the regiment on June 27, 1865.^a There is no record of further changes of regimental commanders.^b

Colonel J. A. Williamson, of the Fourth Iowa Infantry, was in command of the brigade, composed of the Fourth, Ninth, Twenty-fifth and Thirty-first Regiments of Iowa Infantry, during the Atlanta campaign and on the march through Georgia to Savannah. His official report of the operations of his brigade during the Atlanta campaign goes very fully into details, and gives credit to the regiments of his brigade, for the courage and fortitude shown by their officers and men in the numerous battles and skirmishes in which they were engaged. His orders had been implicitly obeyed, and he gives expression to his high appreciation of the service they had rendered, in closing his official report, as follows:

So closes the record of this memorable campaign. I could not make it more brief and do justice to the regiments of the brigade. The vast amount of labor done by this command, in addition to the marching and fighting, and the cheerfulness and zeal with which it has been performed, is sufficient to encourage the best hopes for the success of our army. The troops have neither hesitated nor murmured at any privation or labor. To the officers and men I owe a debt of gratitude for their prompt and willing obedience to orders. The casualties of the brigade during the campaign have been 281. A list of their names, regiments and companies accompanies this report.^c

When the brigade arrived at Savannah, Colonel Williamson was assigned to the command of the division, and Colonel Stone, of the Twenty-fifth Iowa, succeeded to the command of the brigade, which he retained until the close of the war. His official report of the conduct and operations of the brigade dur-

^bReport of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1867, Vol. 1, page 180, shows that Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins received his commission as Colonel on May 11, 1865; that Major Stimming was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel May 27, 1865, and that Captain Farwell was commissioned Major May 27, 1865, but that all these officers were mustered out with the regiment in the rank they had previously held.

ing that long and arduous march through the Carolinas, its encounters with the enemy, and the great hardships and privations which it endured from exposure to the almost constantly inclement weather, constitutes a fitting description of the closing events in the history of the Thirty-first Iowa. As heretofore stated, the movements of the regiment were so closely identified with those of the other regiments of the brigade—particularly so in this last campaign—that the report of the brigade commander comprehends all the most important events pertaining to the latter part of its history. The report is, therefore, here quoted in full:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, FIFTEENTH ARMY CORPS,^a
NEAR GOLDSBORO, N. C., March 26, 1865.

CAPTAIN: In accordance with orders, I respectfully report a summary of the part taken by this command in the campaign just ended. The campaign commenced on the 10th of January and ended, with my command, on the 26th day of March, making the duration two months and sixteen days. On the 10th of January last, I had orders to march from our camp, near Savannah, Ga., to Fort Thunderbolt. On the 12th day of January, I took shipping at Fort Thunderbolt for Beaufort, S. C., with all the regiments of my command, save one (the Twenty-fifth Iowa), which was left behind to assist in fetching up the transportation of the division. This regiment reported to me at Camp, near Beaufort, S. C., on the 14th day of January, 1865. On the 27th day of January we broke up camp and resumed the march.

During the campaign this brigade has had four engagements with the enemy; first at Little Congaree Creek, near Columbia, S. C., on the 15th day of February last. The Second Brigade of this division had the advance on that day, and commenced skirmishing with the enemy within two miles of the camp we had left that morning. They drove the enemy without further assistance until near Little Congaree Creek, when, from the nature of the ground, the enemy was enabled to make a stubborn resistance. Here my brigade was ordered up, and went into position on the left of the Second Brigade, Colonel Catterson commanding. I was ordered to form in two lines of battle, two regiments front, and the other regiment (the Fourth Iowa) to cover the front as skirmishers, and to move forward to effect a crossing of Little Congaree Creek, if possible. Immediately in front of the Fourth Iowa was a swamp about waist deep and about three hundred yards wide. The regiment did not falter at this obstacle, but gallantly plunged in, led by its commanding officer, Lieutenant Colonel Nichols. We were now about five hundred yards above the position held by the rebels on Little Congaree Creek, and a branch of that same stream intervening between us and the creek itself. It was discovered that our present position flanked an outpost of the enemy on the same side of the stream we were on, and three companies of the Fourth Iowa and four companies of the Ninth Iowa were ordered to attack this outpost. Major Anderson, of the Fourth Iowa, commanded the skirmishers, making the attack, and Captain Bowman, Ninth Iowa, commanded the reserve. The attack was made with great vigor, and was entirely successful. The enemy could not withstand the impetuosity of the skirmishers and broke, after a few minutes' fighting, to the opposite side of the creek. I now ordered my command forward to the branch of the Little Congaree, separating us from the main creek, and, with the Fourth Iowa, went about three-fourths of a mile up the creek to a point beyond the enemy's right flank, and in their rear. I ordered the Fourth Iowa to cross here on a log as quietly as possible, intending, as soon as that regiment had crossed, to support it with two other regiments, and attack the enemy in the rear.

Had I succeeded in this arrangement, I have no doubt I should have captured the enemy's artillery and many prisoners, but the men first over discovered themselves to the enemy, and he immediately commenced preparations to leave. The skirmishers drove him off before the column could get over, and this opened the crossing of the Little Congaree Creek. Lieutenant Colonel Nichols and Major Anderson, of the Fourth Iowa, and Captain Bowman, of the Ninth Iowa, deserve notice for ^aAt Savannah, the number of the brigade was changed from the Second to Third, and it will also be seen that the Thirtieth Iowa had been assigned to the brigade, and that it now included the Fourth, Ninth, Twenty-fifth, Thirtieth and Thirty-first Regiments of Iowa Infantry.

the gallant manner in which they did their duty. The whole division now crossed and formed a line of battle on a plateau about a mile from the creek. I again went into position on the left. Some rebel cavalry skirmishers threatening my front, I moved on them with four companies of the Twenty-fifth Iowa, and we soon drove them back to their main line. The list of casualties has been already furnished you. My next engagement with the enemy was at the city of Columbia, captured by my command on the 17th day of February; an official account of which, with the casualties and the number of prisoners, was made to you, under date of the 19th day of February. . . .

The separate report, referred to by Colonel Stone, describes one of the most important events of the campaign, in which the Thirty-first Iowa bore a very important and conspicuous part. The greater portion of that report is, therefore, herewith embodied with the main report, from which the compiler is making quotation, thus including the principal details of all the operations of the regiment and brigade, during the campaign through the Carolinas, in their regular sequence:

. . . . Early in the evening of February 16th, I had orders from Brevet Major General Woods, commanding the division, to be in readiness to cross Broad River during the night, in pontoon boats, at a point to be designated by Colonel Free-dale, of the engineers, and, so soon as crossed, to move on the city. The point determined upon was about one mile above the wreck of the bridge, and two miles above the city. It was expected to have effected a crossing by midnight, but the current of the river was so very strong, the engineer did not succeed in getting a line across until three o'clock of the morning of the 17th. At ten minutes before four o'clock, I sent over two boat loads of sharpshooters, under Captain Bowman of my staff, with instructions to have them placed as skirmishers. He had particular instructions to keep his men quiet, and not to reply to any firing from the enemy, unless satisfied they meant an attack before the column could cross. I went over with the advance of the first regiment—the Thirty-first Iowa—and made a personal reconnaissance of the ground. It was discovered we had landed on a small island, crescent shaped, about two hundred yards in length, and say twenty-five yards in width at the widest place. By the time the four regiments had erected a line of works completely covering the island, day was just dawning, and the enemy, but one hundred yards distant, discovering our proximity, became very active, and opened a very annoying fire from their sharpshooters. From a movement of troops towards his right, I was satisfied the enemy was making preparations to reinforce his line, and that, to insure success with slight loss, I ought to at once attack, without waiting for the remainder of the brigade—part of the Fourth Iowa.

I accordingly made the following disposition of the different regiments, for the attack: The Thirty-first Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins, was moved across the Island towards the mouth, nearly parallel to the river, until I found his left opposite the enemy's right; Major Abernethy, commanding the Ninth Iowa, was placed on Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins' left. These dispositions being made to my satisfaction, I returned to the Island and ordered Lieutenant Colonel Roberts, Thirtieth Iowa, to assault immediately in front of it; the Twenty-fifth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Palmer, to follow as a reserve, and sent word to Lieutenant Colonel Nichols, commanding the Fourth Iowa, to join Colonel Palmer as fast as his men crossed. Everything being now in readiness, the signal was given, and the assault made by all the regiments at the same time. The result proved no mistake either in planning or the execution. Before the enemy was hardly aware of it, we were right into the skirmish pits, and scattering them in every direction. The Thirtieth Iowa here captured twenty-three prisoners. I accompanied this regiment in the charge, and can by personal observation testify to the gallant manner in which they made it. In front of the Island are a number of small bayous running parallel to the river, about twenty feet wide and waist deep; few stopped to find logs on which to cross, but plunged in, holding guns and cartridge boxes above the water. The enemy, seeing his skirmish line destroyed, and the eagerness with which our success was being followed up, became confused and soon broke, leaving our way open to the city. From the prisoners I learned the crossing had been disputed by Colonel Palmer's brigade of infantry and a regiment of Wheeler's cavalry.

When within a mile of the city, a carriage was discovered approaching, flying a flag of truce. It proved to contain Mr. Goodwin, Mayor of Columbia, and the city aldermen, who came to offer terms of capitulation. After some words had passed, they unconditionally surrendered to me the city of Columbia. I joined the party in the carriage, accompanied by Major Anderson of the Fourth Iowa, and Captain Pratt of General Logan's staff, leaving the brigade under temporary charge of Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins, and preceded the column about half a mile. Proceeding to the State House with Captain Pratt, I planted the first United States flag on that building. During the night the city was fired in a number of places, by some of our released prisoners, and negroes. A high wind was prevailing at the time, and, although everything was done that could be to prevent it, at least one-third of the city was destroyed. I cannot at this writing give you an official invoice of the capture of this place, but it will consist in part as follows: Five thousand stand of small arms; forty pieces of artillery; two hundred prisoners (including those in hospital); forty federal officers released; and artillery and small arm ammunition in immense quantities. To Iowa alone is credit to be given for capturing the Capital of the State that has been disloyal since the days of John C. Calhoun, and the contemplated Capital of the Confederacy, as none but Iowa troops were engaged.

Colonel Stone makes special mention of the prompt and efficient manner in which Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins, of the Thirty-first Iowa, and the other regimental commanders performed their duty, while leading their respective commands against the enemy, in that brief but brilliant engagement, which resulted in the complete defeat of the rebel force and the subsequent capture of the city. The following extracts from the official report of Major General Sherman are here quoted, in confirmation of the facts stated in the report of Colonel Stone, and also for the purpose of showing that the orders of the rebel General Hampton, to set fire to the cotton stored in the city, were the main cause of the conflagration which ensued:

General Howard effected a crossing of the Saluda, near the factory, on the 16th, skirmishing with cavalry, and the same night made a flying bridge across Broad River, about three miles above Columbia, by which he crossed over Stone's Brigade, of Woods' Division, Fifteenth Corps. Under cover of this brigade, a pontoon bridge was laid on the morning of the 17th. I was in person at this bridge, and at 11:00 A. M. learned that the Mayor of Columbia had come out in a carriage, and made a formal surrender of the city to Colonel Stone, Twenty-fifth Iowa Infantry, commanding Third Brigade, First Division, Fifteenth Corps. About the same time, a small party of the Seventeenth Corps had crossed the Congaree in a skiff, and entered Columbia from a point immediately west.¹⁰ In anticipation of the occupation of the city, I had made written orders to General Howard, touching the conduct of the troops. These were to destroy absolutely all arsenals and public property, not needed for our own use, as well as all railroads, depots, and machinery useful in war to an enemy, but to spare all dwellings, colleges, schools, asylums, and harmless private property. I was the first to cross the pontoon bridge, and, in company with General Howard, rode into the city. The day was clear, but a perfect tempest of wind was raging. The brigade of Colonel Stone was already in the city, and was properly posted. Citizens and soldiers were on the streets and general good order prevailed. General Wade Hampton, who commanded the Confederate rear guard of cavalry, had, in anticipation of our capture of Columbia, ordered that all cotton, public and private, should be moved into the streets and fired, to prevent our making use of it. Bales were piled everywhere, the rope and bagging cut, and tufts of cotton were blown about in the wind, lodged in the trees and against houses, so as to resemble a snow ¹⁰This was the detachment of the Thirteenth Iowa Infantry referred to in the history of that regiment, contained in Volume 2, of this work, in which it will be seen that a detachment of 75 men of the Thirteenth Iowa, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Kennedy, entered the city of Columbia, and planted the flag of that regiment on the dome of the Capitol. It was a bold and hazardous exploit. There has been some controversy as to which regiment first placed its flag upon the Capitol, but there can be no dispute as to the fact that Colonel Stone's Iowa Brigade made the attack, drove back the enemy and received the surrender of the city, nor as to his statement that none but Iowa troops were engaged in its capture.

storm. Some of these piles of cotton were burning, especially one in the very heart of the city, near the court-house, but the fire was partially subdued by the labor of our soldiers. During the day the Fifteenth Corps passed through Columbia and out on the Camden road. The Seventeenth did not enter the town at all; and, as I have before stated, the left wing and cavalry did not come within two miles of the town. Before one single public building had been fired by order, the smouldering fires, set by Hampton's order, were rekindled by the wind, and communicated to the buildings around. About dark they began to spread, and got beyond the control of the brigade on duty within the city. The whole of Woods' Division was brought in, but it was found impossible to check the flames, which by midnight had become unmanageable, and raged until about 4 A. M., when, the wind subsiding, they were got under control. I was up nearly all night, and saw Generals Howard, Logan, Woods, and others, laboring to save houses and protect families thus suddenly deprived of shelter, and of bedding and wearing apparel. I disclaim on the part of my army any agency in this fire, but on the contrary claim that we saved what of Columbia remains unconsumed. And without hesitation I charge General Wade Hampton with having burned his own city of Columbia. . . . Our officers and men on duty worked well to extinguish the flames; but others not on duty, including the officers who had been long imprisoned there, rescued by us, may have assisted in spreading the fire after it had once begun, and may have indulged in unconcealed joy to see the ruin of the Capital of South Carolina.¹¹

The compiler now resumes the quotation from Colonel Stone's report at the point where the extract from his report of the capture of Columbia was inserted:

I did not meet the enemy again in any force, until the 20th instant, on our march that day from our camp near Cox's bridge on the Neuse River, toward Bentonville. The Second Brigade, Colonel Catterson, had the advance that day, and skirmished freely with the enemy, driving him easily until we had arrived within about three miles of Bentonville. The enemy then became stubborn and threatened an attack on the Second Brigade. I was then ordered up, and went into position on Colonel Catterson's left. We now advanced our line of battle of two brigades about half a mile, and put up works. About three o'clock P. M. I was directed by Brevet Major General Woods, commanding the division, and also by Major General Logan, commanding the corps, to take three regiments and, if possible, clear the road in our front, and open communication with the Fourteenth Corps, now fighting apparently about a mile from us on our left front. I placed the Twenty-fifth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Palmer commanding, (which regiment I had ordered out about an hour before, as skirmishers,) to take the advance, and directed the Thirtieth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Roberts commanding, and the Thirty-first Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins commanding, to follow as a reserve. The Twenty-fifth Iowa was deployed as skirmishers, with their colors in the road I was going to clear, and my first movement with the regiment was to change direction to the right. This movement was made steadily until about three-fourths of the regiment had crossed the road, when our proximity to the rebels on my left and in the road caused very severe skirmishing. Two regiments of the Second Division now came up on my left rear (I think the Sixth Missouri and Thirtieth Ohio), one of them, the Sixth Missouri, deployed as skirmishers. I made arrangements with the officer commanding the last mentioned regiment to join the two regiments with mine, and, at a given signal, the Twenty-fifth Iowa and Sixth Missouri should make a charge. The charge proved entirely successful, although at a severe loss in the Twenty-fifth Iowa. We drove the enemy's skirmishers, composed of Hoke's Division from the Virginia Army; back to their works across the swamp, clearing the road, and opening communication with the Fourteenth Corps. The officers and men of the Twenty-fifth Iowa behaved handsomely and fought desperately. Lieutenant Colonel Palmer, commanding the regiment, and Captain Allen, acting Major (who lost his right leg in the engagement), deserve notice for exposing themselves freely, and for the gallant manner in which they cheered their men forward. At night I retired to a new line, and my place was occupied by other troops. I have already sent you a list of casualties and the number of prisoners captured.

¹¹Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1866, pages 389 to 401 inclusive.

On the 21st instant I had orders to erect a new line of works on the skirmish line, and, at 10 o'clock P. M., I moved three regiments to the front line, the Fourth Iowa on the right, connecting on the left of the First Brigade, Brevet Brigadier General Woods commanding, the Thirtieth Iowa in the center, and the Ninth Iowa on the left. The Twenty-fifth Iowa and the Thirty-first Iowa were in the rear, held in reserve. We put up a temporary line of works under fire of the enemy, and at two o'clock I received orders to charge the enemy's skirmish line, one hundred and fifty yards in my front, in good skirmish pits. We captured the pits with but slight loss, but the enemy evinced so much determination to regain them that the fighting became very sharp. The enemy's main line of battle, behind good works, was by actual measurement but one hundred yards from these skirmish pits, and he fired from the works by volley. At three different times they followed up the fire by volley by an assault on my skirmishers. Their men swarmed over the works and charged gallantly, but I had reinforced the line until I had nearly a line of battle, and our incessant firing prevented him from charging as a perfect organization, and every charge was repulsed. The order came to me so positively to hold the ground I had already gained, from Generals Howard and Logan, that I should have done so or ruined the brigade. At night I relieved the skirmish line with the Thirty-first Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel Jenkins commanding. Colonel Jenkins managed the new line admirably. It rained a good deal during the night, but his men worked faithfully, and he put up quite a strong line of works so near the enemy that the conversation had to be carried on in whispers.

Captain Teale, of the Fourth Iowa, deserves especial notice for his gallantry in holding the most exposed and dangerous part of the line. I regret to announce that this gallant young officer was severely wounded in the leg. Lieutenant Colonel Nichols and Major Anderson of the Fourth Iowa, deserve mention for voluntarily going on the skirmish line, when there was some wavering manifested. I mention these officers from personal observation, as twice during the day I deemed it my duty to go on the skirmish line myself. The other officers on the skirmish line, Captain Inman, Ninth Iowa, Lieutenant Shields, Fourth Iowa, Lieutenant Sharp, Ninth Iowa, Lieutenant Refley, Thirtieth Iowa, are all reported to me to have behaved well and set a good example to their men. The loss in the skirmish line was quite severe. I sent you an official list of casualties the same night, and the prisoners captured.

On the morning of the 22d, half an hour before day, I rode out to the advance post, and ordered a patrol forward to feel of the enemy; but it was discovered that he had left during the night. I at once sent word to the General commanding division, and, with a detachment of the Thirty-first Iowa, followed him. Everything indicated a precipitate retreat; a few stragglers were picked up; some of their dead and wounded were found near the roadside uncared for; and quite a number of small arms, haversacks, etc., were found scattered in their deserted camp. Just at sunrise, I ran onto their rear guard, composed of cavalry, and, my detachment being too small to fight it, I covered the road with a few men to make an effect, and ordered some ten or fifteen men as skirmishers to annoy the enemy, until a regiment,—the Thirty-first Iowa,—which I had just ordered up, should arrive. Very soon after this our entire division moved to Bentonville, where we remained during the day, and at sundown we returned to the camp we had left in the morning. The graves of seventeen rebel officers in my front indicate that the enemy suffered severely in killed and wounded. On our march to Goldsboro, on the 23d inst., I had the good fortune to have the post of honor—rear guard for the Army of the Tennessee. The rear of my command fell upon the Twenty-fifth Iowa. On the 24th inst. I was ordered to remain at the pontoon bridge over the Neuse River, near Goldsboro, to cover the crossing of our corps train, and, on the 26th inst., I rejoined the division in camp near Goldsboro.

During the campaign just closed, this brigade has been in four engagements, with the following loss: Killed, 7; wounded, 64; missing, 12. We have captured and turned over to the Provost Marshal 145 prisoners of war. In taking Columbia, S. C., we captured 43 pieces of artillery, about five thousand stand of arms, immense quantities of ammunition and ordnance stores, and released 40 Union officers confined there. We have marched 485 miles, built 15,037 yards of corduroy roads, and destroyed three miles of railroad. The brigade is in excellent health and spirits, but very ragged. My thanks are due to all my staff officers, Captain John N. Bell, Twenty-fifth Iowa, Acting Assistant Quartermaster General; Lieutenant Sam W. Snow, Twenty-fifth

Iowa, Acting Assistant Adjutant General; Captain A. Bowman, Ninth Iowa; Lieutenant Baron H. Crane, Twenty-fifth Iowa; Lieutenant D. Rorick, Thirty-first Iowa—now in the hands of the enemy—and J. W. Gilman, Thirty-first Iowa, Acting Assistant Quartermaster, for the zeal and earnestness with which they have discharged their whole duty in the campaign just ended.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE A. STONE, Colonel

*Commanding Third Brigade, First Division, Fifteenth Army Corps.*¹²

As will be seen from the foregoing report, the Thirty-first Iowa performed its full share of duty in the closing campaign of the war, and—as in all its previous record—acquitted itself with honor and distinction.

From Goldsboro, the Thirty-first Iowa marched with its brigade and division, by way of Richmond, Va., to Washington, where it participated in the Grand Review of Sherman's army, by the President and General Grant, on the 24th day of May, 1865. The Thirty-first Iowa—after remaining a short time in camp near Washington—was conveyed by rail to Louisville, Ky., and was there mustered out of the service of the United States, on June 27, 1865.¹³ It then proceeded to Davenport, Iowa, where it was formally disbanded, and the survivors returned to their homes.

In the great War of the Rebellion, no State rendered more conspicuous or devoted service to the cause of the Union than Iowa. Among all the splendid regiments which the State sent into the field, there were none which served more faithfully and none that have a more honorable record of service than her Thirty-first Regiment of Infantry. The casualties of the regiment are shown in the following summary, and the names of those who were killed and wounded, or who died from wounds or disease, and of those who were captured, discharged, or transferred to other commands, will be found in the subjoined roster. The names of those who served well and faithfully, and who were so fortunate as to escape death, wounds, disease or imprisonment, are also recorded there. The State has honored itself in thus preserving for posterity the record of its soldiers.
